Punctilious Regard Shown to all their Wishes.

The Arms Committee to be Balloted for in the Senate.

Progress of Codification of the United States Postal Laws.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The official reception of the Japanese Embassy will take place to-morrow and will be of the most precise and formal character. The official programme has been arranged between Secretary FISH and the Chief of the Embassy with the utmost particularity of detail, this being a point upon which the Japanese are peculiarly sensitive. Probably no such formality as now proposed for to-morrow has been seen in this country for many years, if ever. The reception will take place in the east room. The President, accompanied by the Vice-President, the Cabinet, Speaker of the House, the members of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, and the officers of the army and navy, in full uniform, will take position in line according to rank on the east side of the east room, at precisely 12 o'clock, between 12 and 12:05, as the programme with great precision states, the Japanese will enter the room and take position in the same line, and in order of rank. When all is in readiness, IWAKURA, the chief Ambassador, at the head of the Japanese line, will turn half round, and read his address to the President, and the President will respond. This done the Secretary of State will present the American officials in order to the members of the Embassy, who will bow and retire to their former position. When the presentation is over the frigid formality will abate, and the occasion will assume more of the character of a general reception. The Japanese will be in the full court costume of their country with hats. Straw-colored gloves have been strictly prescribed as the positive prerequisite for all Americans present at the special request of the Japanese.

THE RUMORED INTENTION TO GO TO CHURCH.

There was a dense crowd at the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church this morning, many persons in addition to the usual attendants having been attracted thither by reports that the Japanese Embassy would occupy seats especially set apart for them. Several of the visitors came to the church, but they did not satisfy the public expectation. Before Dr. NEWMAN commenced the delivery of his sermon he said the announcement had been made in newspapers without his authority, but that next Sunday, as he had been informed by Minister DE LONG, the Embassy, or a part of them, will visit the church. It should here be remarked that the Embassy thus far have made no calls, etiquette preventing them from doing so until after they shall have been officially received by the President.

WHY REBELS TAKE THE TRIBUNE.

Gen. W. T. CLARK, of Texas, made a speech in the House, yesterday, in which he vindicated the Republican Party in Texas from the libels of the minority Kuklux report, and the New-York Tribune. He gave the particulars of the indictment of Gov. DAVIS and the development of the bribery of the Grand Jury which brought in the bill. He exposed the financial mismanagement of the Democratic Party in Texas, and said the Tribune was read in that State by rebels. It will be remembered that Mr. GREELEY personally began his Presidential movement in Texas, and during his visit to that State he sought to induce Gen. CLARK to come out against GRANT. CLARK refused. GREELEY went back to Vicksburg and made that speech, in which he declared that the day would come when the memory of LEE and JACKSON would be venerated equally with the patriot dead of the Union. The Democracy of Texas then subscribed freely to the Tribune, and Mr. GREELEY has since never omitted an opportunity to prejudge, by malicious attacks, the case of Gen. CLARK, now before the Elections Committee for judicial decision. Gen. CLARK simply refused to support HORACE GREELEY for the Presidency.

THE PROPOSED ARMS INVESTIGATION.

The Committee which the Senate has ordered to investigate the sale of arms will, perhaps, be balloted for to-morrow. This course would be strictly according to the rule in reference to the selection of committees. It is regarded as certain that any attempt to take from the table and adopt the resolution offered on Friday by Mr. CAMERON, naming a committee without Mr. SCHURZ being upon it, will provoke a new and perhaps long and personal debate. While there is admitted to be no Parliamentary law or courtesy which would assign Mr. SCHURZ to the Committee, there are those who are determined to find fault if his wish to be upon it is disregarded, and for this reason many think as a matter of policy it would be better to appoint him and give him a commission, to be as unfair as he can. The motion to proceed to ballot for a committee is debatable if any one chooses to debate it, but it would seem almost impossible that any one can have the presumption to bring on a political discussion on a motion to execute a rule of the Senate. The ballot will, moreover, be the fairest way of determining the real wish of the Senate on this subject. It is not understood that such a course has been decided upon, but it has been spoken of, and could without doubt be prevail. Whether Mr. SCHURZ will get an election is something of a problem, as he has sworn, in substance, to bring in an adverse report, in any event. There has been no caucus consultation of this subject, and every Senator can do as he pleases in regard to the subject.

PATENT OFFICE GAZETTE.

The publication of the weekly official Patent Office Gazette, which was begun sometime ago, has been received with favor by inventors, patent attorneys and others whose business is connected with the office. The Commissioner has now under consideration a plan to increase the usefulness of this Gazette by annexing to it drawings giving the essential and important features of each invention. The price to subscribers, which was placed at $5 per year, will be somewhat enlarged, perhaps doubled, if the new scheme is authorized by Congress. Already the Gazette has a large subscription list. If the drawings are added, it can be made to take the place of the old annual reports, and will take every week to those who are interested enough to pay a small subscription, the same information which they get in the old reports after two years or more of waiting. The plan will reduce the expenses to the Government, which is another recommendation.

CODIFYING THE POSTAL LAWS.

Among the duties which the Senate will not be able to leave undone at the adjournment of the session is action upon the codification of the Postal laws. The revised code was passed by the House in the last Congress, but never received the action of the Senate. It was again introduced in the last Spring's session of the present Congress, and was the first bill which the House passed this Winter. The Chairman of the Senate Committee on Post-offices and Post Roads has tried several times to bring the bill before the Senate, but the business of President-making, or rather the attempts at unmaking, has left no time for its consideration. The edition of Postal laws which has been distributed is nearly exhausted, and a new edition must soon be printed, and it ought to be revised. Some laws have been wholly repealed, some partially, and in some cases laws contradict each other, and the whole is cumbersome, making it difficult for Postmasters to learn fully what their duties are. The new Postal Code is very long, and will require two or three days of the Senate's time. No fear is expressed that it will not be acted upon, but time begins to seem short. Among the amendments which the Senate will propose is a section establishing the system of penny postal cards, which is now in use in most of the countries of Europe. The feeling in favor of postal cards is gaining ground, and it is believed the issue will be authorized. Its introduction will be the practical extension of a one-cent letter rate to all who would be benefited by that rate, while the advantages and usefulness of the card in many other respects are undoubted.

THE CENTENARY ANNIVERSARY.

The Commissioners who have been appointed by the President from each State and Territory to prepare and superintend the plans for the centenary celebration at Philadelphia will hold their first meeting at Philadelphia to-morrow. An informal meeting of some of the Commissioners last evening discussed the propriety of the Centennial Commission purchasing Independence Hall and fitting it up as a museum for every memento of the signers of the Declaration which can be secured.

WOOL AND WOOLENS.

EDWARD ATKINSON, EDWARD HARRIS and JOHN L. HAYES, of New-England, will have a hearing before the Ways and Means to-morrow, in relation to the tariff on wool and woolens. Mr. ATKINSON, who writes revenue reform articles for the Atlantic, and Mr. HARRIS, will urge a reduction of the present duties, and Mr. HAYES will oppose.

MONTHLY BOND PURCHASES—NO GOLD SALES.

The Secretary of the Treasury has authorized the assistant Treasurer at New-York to purchase $1,000,000 of bonds on Thursday, the 14th, and $1,000,000 on Thursday, the 28th inst. The Secretary of the Treasury sells no gold this month, in consequence of heavy payments to be made on account of called bonds which fall due on the 5th inst. to the extent of $40,000,000.

THE CHICAGO RELIEF BILL.

The Chicago Relief bill will be called up in the Senate to-morrow, and Mr. LOGAN and Mr. WRIGHT will appear as its special friends. There seems a better prospect of its passage now than heretofore.

PERSONAL.

Gen. HOWARD in his visit to the Apaches will be accompanied by Capt. M. B. WICKERSHAM of his staff, and by his brother, Mr. ROLAND HOWARD, of Princeton, N. C.

AFFAIRS IN UTAH.

The Snow Blockade Broken—The Japanese Embassy—Adjournment of the Legislature—The Constitutional Convention—Surrender of Polygamy—Financial Perplexities.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SALT LAKE CITY, Monday, Feb. 26, 1872.

At last the blockade is broken, and we are once more in communication with you of the Atlantic sea-board. The first of the delayed trains, snow-bound and storm-locked among the Black Hills for well nigh a month, worked its way through the drift and reached Ogden one week ago, and the others have been coming in ever since, like stragglers in the rear of a mighty army, buffeted and worn out with their almost superhuman struggle with the elements which barred their pathway. Passengers who came through on the first of these trains, and successfully "ran the blockade," were looked upon by their friends on arriving here very much in the light of shipwrecked mariners who had at last made land, and in truth they had much the same story of hardship and suffering to tell. Few, however, are disposed to complain, all thought of repining being swallowed up in gratitude at their safe transit. The utmost praise is accorded to Superintendent SICKLES, Col. CARR, and other officers and employes of the Union Pacific Railway for their herculean efforts to open a passage for the trains, and to minister to the comfort of the passengers. What men could do they did to remove the obstacles accumulating in this way, and after a three weeks' hand-to-hand fight with the elements they came off victorious.

Isolated as we have been almost since the New-Year, the telegraph has advised you of the outline of our history meanwhile, and your readers are doubtless apprised of the leading events of the past weeks west of the Rocky Mountains. But the discomfort and inconvenience, at times amounting to downright hardship, of being mountain-locked for thirty days in the dead of Winter, cut off from all communication with the East save through the overworked telegraph, one can understand only through experience. The presence of the Japanese Embassy in our city during three weeks of the blockade served to vary the tedium of the slow-moving day, and without their cheerful, good-natured countenances, and the festivities incident to their reception and stay in our midst, we should have been lonely indeed.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The Mormon Legislature adjourned ten days since without having accomplished very much of either good or ill for the would-be State of Deseret. A more purely ecclesiastical body was, perhaps, never convened on the Continent than this same Utah Legislature. Loyal Mormons all, they numbered between the two Houses nine of the twelve apostles of the church, besides a dozen or more bishops and presidents of districts, or what are denominated in the church vernacular, "Stakes of Zion." The Utah Legislature is undoubtedly the only legislative body on the Continent whose members profess and practice one and the same religious faith, and worship at one and the same altar. The churchly nature of the body cropped out in a thousand ways. Almost their first official action was to vote themselves supplies of the "church papers," and to tender the editor of those papers the freedom of the halls, leaving all other representatives of the press to kick their heels in the lobby. Members rising to address the House are recognized not as the "gentleman from Salt Lake," or whatsoever locality they might represent, but as Brother YOUNG, Brother PRATT, Brother CANNON, &c.

CHURCH AND STATE.

Another striking illustration of the intimate blending of Church and State, and of the theocratic tendencies of this people, was witnessed in the passage of a bill appropriating over $6,000 to Apostle ORSON PRATT, Sr., Speaker of the House, for services in translating the Book of Mormon into the Deseret alphabet. The Book of Mormon, as your readers are doubtless aware, is the assumed revelation to JOSEPH SMITH, and constitutes the chief corner stone of the Church. It is to the Mormons what the Koran is to the devout Mohammedan, or the Bible to the followers of Christ. The Deseret alphabet is the result of an abortive attempt made on the part of some of the Mormon leaders, a few years ago, to establish a language and literature of their own. It is a rude, awkward, and cumbersome system of hieroglyphics, exceedingly difficult to learn, and of no earthly use when acquired. It was the fruit of a design on the part of BRIGHAM YOUNG, ORSON PRATT, and a few other leaders in the Church, to more completely isolate this people from the outer world by establishing a language and literature of their own, in which should be recorded the history of the Church and the doings of the prophet. Of course the effort was a complete failure, and there are not a dozen men in the Territory who can read these absurd hieroglyphics. But PRATT wanted his pay for the translation, and the church exchequer being somewhat depleted, as the result of heavy drafts thereon, to defray the expenses of defending sundry prophets and apostles charged with divers high crimes and misdemeanors, this modest apostle asked the Legislature to foot the bill. I need hardly add that it did not receive the signature of Gov. WOOD, and that other church appropriations claims in their nature came to an untimely end through his prompt and energetic action. Imagine for a moment the Legislature of the commonwealth of New-York appropriating the people's money to defray the expenses of translating the Episcopal book of common prayer into Chaldaic or Syriac.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

The Legislature adjourned only to make way for the Constitutional Convention, which is now in full operation. In their frantic zeal for admission to the Union, the Mormon Legislature gave no heed either to the message of Gov. WOOD, vetoing their bill for a Constitutional Convention, or to the passage by Congress of the Apportionment bill, preventing the creation of new States until their population should equal the ratio of representation in the House of Representatives. Determined to have a State at any and all hazards, immediately after the Governor's veto they hurried a joint resolution through both Houses, calling upon the people to elect delegates to a constitutional convention which convened one week ago today. Upon the very threshold of the convention the tools of the priesthood were met by a resolution from the only real Gentile in the body, Judge WILLIAM HAYDON, late of Nevada, calling for an adjournment sine die, the principal reason urged in support of the resolution being that the Territory was as yet unprepared to assume the burdens and expense of a State Government, and that its population was too meagre to warrant its admission. The resolution was argued two days, and was, of course, voted down, HAYDON's vote being the only one recorded in its favor. During the argument TOM FITCH took the floor, and proceeded to deliver a two-hours' philippic against Chief-Justice MCKEAN, which for bitterness of invective, recklessness of statement, and utter disregard of truth, may challenge comparison with anything of the kind in the English tongue. The Convention being called without authority of law, its members receive no compensation, and to this fact is doubtless due the haste which has thus far characterized their deliberations. From present indications, an adjournment may be looked for early in March. The Constitution of Nevada is being used as a model by which to frame that of the new State of Deseret, and is being quite closely followed in its essential features. Twenty days at the most will, doubtless, cover the entire session.

SURRENDER OF POLYGAMY.

The most significant feature of the Convention thus far, has been a growing disposition on the part of its members to surrender polygamy as a condition precedent to admission to the Union. FITCH is the champion par excellence of this new departure, and he is ably seconded by a few of the more intelligent Mormons, who have never practiced polygamy, and who are desirous of putting Utah in accord with the spirit of the age in so far as it may be done. The movement at first met with but little encouragement upon the part of the hoary-headed patriarchs of the Church, sturdy pioneers of the faith, who insist on polygamy as a divine revelation, and desire to hand it down as a legacy beyond price to their children. It is, however, daily gaining ground, and it is not too much to predict, from the present tone and temper of the Convention, that if Congress should to-morrow offer statehood to the Mormons, on the sole condition of their surrendering polygamy, or rather of promising to yield it, the condition would gladly be accepted. How faithfully such a promise, if exacted, would be afterward kept with the laws enforced through Mormon courts and juries, is another and quite a different question.

THE FEDERAL OFFICERS.

Chief-Justice MCKEAN left for Washington a few days since, in accordance with telegraphic instructions from the President to that effect. The object of his journey is to confer with the President and Attorney-General upon the situation here, and to advise with leading members of Congress as to what legislation is needed in the present crisis. Rumors of impending changes in the Federal officials here are in circulation, though I can learn of nothing definite as yet, and it is not likely that any changes will occur until Judge MCKEAN shall reach Washington. A lame effort at his removal was made a few weeks since by certain self-styled Gentiles of the "Jack Mormon" order, the pretext seized upon being his refusal to admit Mormon murderers to bail, in accordance with telegraphic instructions from the Attorney-General. The only effect of the movement has been to call forth an expression of the views of the Gentiles and law-abiding citizens of the Territory, indorsing Judge MCKEAN's official conduct in unqualified terms, and insisting upon his retention in the position he has thus far so worthily filled. Meetings have been called in every mining camp in the Territory, and the most enthusiastic proceedings have been had in the way of indorsing MCKEAN. A petition in approval of his conduct was sent to the President last week, containing six thousand bona fide signatures, and the number could have been swelled to ten thousand in another week. Private advices received here within the past three days from Washington convey the intelligence that the course of the Federal Judiciary of Utah has thus far met with the unqualified approval of the Administration.

AN EXHAUSTED EXCHEQUER.

The attention of law-abiding citizens of the Territory is turned anxiously toward Congress in the hope of such legislation as shall relieve the Courts from the embarrassments under which they labor for lack of funds. The gravest criminal causes known to the law are awaiting trial upon the calendar of the Third District Court, and there is not a dollar at hand with which to conduct the prosecutions. Three persons, indicted for the most brutal murder ever committed in Utah, are confined in a small room not far distant from where I write, where they pay for their own subsistence, and pay each of two officers $2 50 per day, for guarding them. The United States Marshal, Col. PATRICK, one of the most capable and efficient officers in the employ of the Government in the Territory, is tied hand and foot for lack of means to care for the prisoners, and is already largely in debt for past disbursements. What men can do unaided and alone toward the enforcement of law and the punishment of crime, has been done by the Federal officials in this Territory, but there is a point beyond which forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and that point has certainly been reached. The responsibility rests with Congress to determine whether this state of affairs shall continue. J. L. H.

Another Blockage on the Union Pacific Railroad.

OMAHA, March 3.—One train on the Union Pacific Railroad is reported stuck in the snow between Sherman and Red Butte Stations, one at Rock Creek, and another at Medicine Bow. The extent of the present blockade is not known.

Adjournment of the Constitutional Convention—Anxiety to Augment the Population.

SALT LAKE CITY, March 3.—The Convention for the admission of Utah adjourned sine die last evening, after adopting a memorial to Congress which seriously criticises the territorial form of government; claims a wonderfully exaggerated increase in population which the facts do not bear out, and expresses a loyalty of the Mormon people which is not confirmed by their history. A resolution was passed authorizing Probate Judges to take a census of the Territory by counties, commencing on the third Monday in March, the returns to be sent to Delegate ROGERS, of each County. Some one interrupted a swelling the population on paper sufficiently to bring the Territory in as a State. This movement is regarded by the Gentiles as an intentional fraud on the part of FITCH and his brother Mormons. The most exaggerated estimate now places the population under 150,000. The Mormons hope to make it 200,000.

NATIONAL BOARD OF TRADE.

Meeting of the Executive Committee in Washington—Reciprocity with Canada—Currency and Other Matters.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The Executive Council of the National Board of Trade has been in session in this city during the past week, and has had under consideration the various questions upon which the Board acted at its annual meeting in St. Louis in December last. The Council has memorialized Congress in favor of appointment of a Commissioner to be appointed in behalf of the Dominion of Canada to negotiate a new treaty of reciprocity between Canada and the United States on a broader and more comprehensive basis than that upon which the former treaty rested. Some improvements of the law of July 14, 1870, relating to direct importations to interior cities, in order to make the act more efficient, have been recommended, and it has urged the formation of a Sanitary Board of Appeal to protect our citizens and our foreign commerce from the irresponsible control of local Quarantine officers. It has presented the resolutions adopted by the Board at St. Louis in favor of a gradual and moderate contraction of the greenback currency, and of a revision of the tariff system of the country, so that monopoly may be checked, healthy competition in trade and manufactures established, and native industry protected by cheapening the necessaries and comforts of life to the masses of the people. The Council has appeared before both Committees on Commerce of Congress, and have represented the views of the Board on the shipping question, and the direct interest of the ship-building interests, and urged that while many complications exist in connection with the plans proposed for the relief of the latter, the course to be pursued in reference to the former is perfectly simple and easy. There being a deficiency of tonnage, the judgment of the Board is that every barrier should be removed to its acquisition by American merchants, wherein they find that which is suitable for their purposes. The Council has therefore presented a memorial, drawn with great care, in accordance with the expressed and unanimous opinion of the Board, asking for permission to American ship-owners to register under their own flag, for purposes of foreign trade, steamers and sailing-vessels wherever built, including all tonnage alienated to foreign flags during the war, so far as owners may desire this. The memorial also recommends the withdrawal of duty from bonded warehouses of ship-stores and supplies, and of articles needed for repairs. These views were supported by speeches from FREDERICK FROLEY, of Philadelphia, President of the Board; GEORGE OPDYKE, of New-York; ROBERT R. KIRKLAND, of Baltimore, and others.

THE WEATHER.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, March 4—1 A. M.—The barometer has continued highest over the Gulf States, and southerly to westerly winds, with clear and pleasant weather, prevailed over the South Atlantic and Middle States, and clearing weather over the East Atlantic States during Saturday night. The temperature has risen from Texas to Michigan, and eastward to the Atlantic, very generally. An area of diminished pressure has moved from Iowa north-eastward over Lake Huron. Light winds and snow have extended from Missouri and northward to Tennessee and the lake region, followed by rising barometer. Falling temperature, north-westerly winds and clearing weather from the Lower Missouri valley to Lakes Superior and Michigan and to Illinois.

PROBABILITIES.

The barometer will probably continue falling during the night from the lower lakes to the middle and east Atlantic coast, with westerly and southerly winds, increased cloudiness, and light snow and light rain on Monday; clear and pleasant weather prevail on Monday over the Southern States, with westerly to north-westerly winds, rising barometer; north-westerly wind, clearing weather, and falling temperature from the upper lake region, during the night, to Lake Erie and the Ohio Valley and Tennessee, and over the Middle States probably by Monday evening. Dangerous winds are not anticipated for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts to-night.

Adjournment of the Kansas Legislature.

TOPEKA, Kansas, March 3.—Both Houses of the Legislature adjourned sine die yesterday. The tax levy was fixed at six and one-half mills, which will pay all appropriations and leave a balance of $440,000 for current expenses of the State. A large number of local bills failed to receive the Governor's signature, but he signed the bill which provides that persons convicted of murder shall be confined in the Penitentiary one year before being hung, and then not executed until the Governor issues a warrant therefor. The Senate failed to reach the bill abolishing capital punishment.

The Kramer Murder—Death of Mrs. Kramer.

SCHUYLKILL HAVEN, Penn., March 3.—Mrs. KRAMER, who was brutally beaten at the time her husband was murdered, in Washington Township, died at 3 o'clock this morning. The indignation of the people against the murderer has become doubly intense, and were it in their power to take him from the custody of the authorities he would meet with no mercy at their hands.

Robberies by an Express Messenger—Detection, Confession and Restitution.

RICHMOND, Va., March 3.—For some time past considerable sums of money, consigned to various parties South through the Southern Express Company, and mostly from New-York, have failed to reach their destination. The missing packages disappeared somewhere between Richmond, Va., and Wilmington, N. C., but every effort on the part of the route agent, Mr. BELL, and the Superintendent of the Company, to discover the leakage was fruitless. These defalcations were reported to the head-quarters of the Southern Express Company in New-York, and detectives were engaged to trace them. There were four express messengers on the route between here and Wilmington, and of these LE ROY ARCHER, a young man of good family and respectable connections, turned out to be the criminal. When arrested he was first stoutly denied the theft of the packages, but "when the officer showed him the proofs he confessed the crime, and with the money went to Petersburg, where his father resided. Nearly all the missing funds were found buried under an apple tree in the paternal orchard. The largest of the packages was sent from New-York on the 7th of February, and was stolen on the 8th, and the other, of $150, was sent on the 19th and stolen on the 19th of September last. ARCHER, with the aid of a heart-broken father, refunded all of the money but $60, and was allowed to go free by the Express Company.

A Pirate Prophet—General Resurrection of Redman Promised.

From the Virginia (Nevada) Enterprise, Feb. 25.

The Pirates are again in about as strong force in and around the city as they were before their late tumultuous exodus in obedience to the warning voice of their new prophet. The more intelligent of the tribe are inclined to believe their big prophet a big humbug. He has appointed the general resurrection for next Spring, when the grass shall have attained the height of a "pony's hoofs." At this time, he says, all the mountains will be leveled, and all the people of the past and present will dwell together on the great plain thus formed. Inclined with whom we were conversing a day or two since to regard the new doctrine, were anxious to know whether at any time the dead of the whites had ever thus come up out of the ground. On the whole, they were evidently not displeased with the idea of a general resurrection. One of them said, "It would be nice to see all our dead uncles and mothers and brothers and sisters that are dead come up and live with us forever." Although the Indians are somewhat inclined to laugh at their prophet's predicted great flood when in the place of a white man, yet it is easy to see that his teachings have impressed them not a little. The Indians here say that the prophet gathers the people about him nightly and preaches to them sometimes nearly all night.

SOMETHING ABOUT FARMING.

Primitive Methods in California in the Early Days—A Sad Mistake.

A writer in the San Jose Mercury gives this account of early agricultural methods and implements in California, under the Mission rule:

Plows were roughly fashioned from the stems of small trees, while the brush was the only material of which harness was composed. Yokes for cattle were merely poles of suitable length, lashed to their horns by means of raw-hide thongs, and the only vehicles were carts, of which the wheels were sections of logs, and resembled huge cheeses with holes through the centres. Instead of chains, raw-hide ropes were used. In fact, at that period the whole business of plowing and seeding a California farm might be accomplished without the use of iron in any implement, if we except the pole or goad used for driving the cattle; for in the end of this persuader was inserted a small brad or awl.

Relating to these carts, an anecdote is told which may not be out of place here. In a certain section of California the people were greatly annoyed by marauding parties of Indians from the mountains, or wild Indians, as they were called. Now it happened one day that an American who was riding past a grove in which was situated a ranchero house, heard issuing from the thicket the most terrible and piercing screams. Hurrying with all speed to the next ranch he informed the people what he had heard, and that he believed the place was attacked by Indians, and that they were murdering the women and children. The ranchmen bravely responded to his call, and hastily, with such rifles as they could collect, hurried back with him to the place, vowing by the way vengence upon los paralos y roberos—the pirates and robbers. Arriving at the place of the supposed attack, they found no robbers there, but only a couple of tame Indians engaged in the peaceful occupation of hauling fence poles with two of these carts propelled by oxen, and as these had axles, they composed entirely of wood, and no lubricating material used, a great screeching was the consequence.

The manner of plowing was peculiar. To every pair of oxen there were two men. Indeed the business of one was to hold the one-handled plow upright, and also to use the persuader, or goad, while the other acted in the capacity of guide, marching solemnly just in front of the team. These plowmen were accustomed to wear only the boots and pants provided by Dame Nature. A sombrero hat with a slit in the center, and an old broad-brimmed sombrero (hat) completed their outfit. Sometimes the plow-holder acted as guide to those in the rear, as frequently there were five or six plows running in the same field. The furrows were more scratches, being four or five inches wide and about three in depth.

The harvesting was accomplished in the same primitive fashion, the grain being cut with sickles and stacked in a small circular enclosure, having space between the stack and fence for a passage or roadway. Into this a band of horses was driven, two or three mounted drivers being among them, whooping and yelling like demons. Round and round the stack went the flying band, the grain meantime being thrown on the ground for them to run over. After a few hours' exercise of this kind, the horses were turned out, the threshed straw thrown over the fence, more of the unthreshed grain spread on the ground, the horses again turned in, again the wild, mad chase performed, and so on until the stack was finished.

The threshed grain was then imperfectly separated from the chaff and dirt by carrying it upon high staffolds and pouring it down while the wind was blowing. This, it will be perceived, was the process practiced three thousand years ago. Though poor and rude the plan, still, owing to the fertility of the soil, crops fair in quantity and quality were obtained, and the padres, madres, senoritas, Sombres and Indios (Indians)—these latter being peons and performing nearly all the labor—were enabled to luxuriate on tortillas, onions, beans, &c., to their hearts' content.

A Defense of the New-Haven Railroad.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your editorial of the 29th ultimo, "Locking Doors on Railroads," is erroneous in impression. The language reiterated in your editorial of March 2 is:

"In this instance, a lady steps on board a train before it starts, but on trying to get into a car finds the door locked, and herself standing helpless upon the platform just as the train moves, and exposed to the full force of a furious gale of wind. The result is that she is either jolted or blown off from the car, and almost killed by the fall," &c., &c.

The lady in question ascended the train, as other passengers did, when it stopped before crossing the bridge at Harlem. It was a long train. She entered the fourth car without difficulty. Desiring to join her parents, who were in the funeral cortege of Mr. LE GRAND LOCKWOOD, occupying three cars in the rear of the train, which had been specially, and very courteously, set apart for the mourning friends, the lady passed through four cars, not finding one door locked until she reached the first of the funeral cars. This (the President's) car contained Mr. LOCKWOOD's family. Its front door only was locked, very properly, to prevent intrusion on their privacy. The official who was put in special charge of this separate part of the train, had the key of the locked door, had stepped back into the next car. The lady, entirely unexpected, had just come down from a visit to Hartford to meet her friends, and had been considerately set down on the south side of the bridge, in deviation from the rules. When she presented herself at the locked door one gentleman started to obtain the key, and another to find her father, and almost immediately the melancholy and mysterious disappearance from the platform occurred. It is a mystery. The train was stopped within a mile, as soon as could be in the excitement and confusion, and backed down to the West Haven Station. All was done that could be consistently asked.

This statement is made by one cognizant of all the facts connected with Mr. LOCKWOOD's family, a friend of the lady and her family, who tried to communicate with her while she stood at the outside and he at the inside of the locked door. He has been a commuter on this road for eighteen years, is not a stockholder, and never asked or received a personal favor from the Company. He is moved spontaneously to offer this correction in the interests of truth and justice, and in gratitude for the courtesy extended on that sad occasion.

It should be added that the cars on the New-Haven Road are not locked except when moved by horses between Twenty-seventh and Forty-fourth streets, and then only the front doors. Intelligent and considerate passengers generally approve this arrangement, made for their comfort, and consider this one of the safest, and in many respects one of the best-managed roads in this country. CHAPTERS ON REFORM.

The Necessities of New-York and How to Meet Them.

BY NON-PARTISAN.

An Excise Law and Lager-Beer.

CHAPTER VI.

The [illegible] for the City of New-York is one of [illegible] amusement for those who seek only the public good. For that reason some fare for deferring it for the time, and others fare for declining altogether to deal with it. I can agree with neither of these factions. The subject is of such vital interest, and one as to which good men and women have such intensity of feeling and conviction, that it cannot be deferred for more than a single year, and not even for this time with safety or with credit to the friends of reform. In less than a year some of those now united would begin to urge, and others would begin to fear, Excise legislation, which all would not support, and distrust and division would be the consequence. The reign of good feeling caused by a glorious triumph has calmed down the peculiarities of individual opinions on this and all other questions. Difficulties can be far more easily solved now than at any later period, when the Excise law, being isolated, (and perhaps passed at a time of some reaction,) will have all the unpractical zeal of all kinds of theorists and all the schemes of demagogues concentrated upon it. It seems clear to me that a wise enactment on this dangerous and vital subject now, would move calmly through the Legislature on the great tide of public opinion destined to carry forward so much good legislation for the City. Delay will only provoke complications. When that infernal conspiracy was formed, by which the ignorant, the intemperate, the bigoted, and the criminal, under the lead of political jobbers and Jesuit priests, were to co-operate for municipal power and profit, it was natural that an Excise law, which did more than all others to put some reasonable limits to the abuses of ten thousand grog-shops, should be the first object of attack. Leaders, whose votes and funds depended on the contributions of the keepers and the venality of the patrons of these places, would naturally desire to increase alike the number of the profits of the dens of drunkenness. Those who would not scruple to pillage fifty millions from the City, would not hesitate to divert a million, going annually from licenses to the City revenue, over to their own private treasury. If there were particulars in which more sagacity on the part of the friends of the Excise law of 1857 would have caused it to be amended, it is quite as true that the chiefs of that conspiracy did not desire any change to be made in the interest of the public good. They only desired to gain votes and funds, and to make friends of those who would give them for a repeal of that law. Its overturn was a part of a general eclipse of civilization visible in every part of the City Government; and now the dark body that caused that eclipse has been crushed, and we are in the light again. There is a new and higher power in the ascendent. Let us, then, see what are the difficulties of this subject and the proper remedies for them.

There are four main questions involved—the Sunday question, the question of enforcing morality by law, the question of license rates, and the constitution of the Excise Board. I will glance at each of them.

We should start with a clear apprehension of the fact that a legislative measure involves a question of power and numbers as well as of policy and justice. The question is not merely as to having one of two not very objectionable laws, but of having a pretty good law, a very bad one, or the great evils of no effectual law at all. Regard must be had to the actual opinions and theories of the people, however unreasonable we may regard them. On this Sunday question we have the widest extremes of opinion to deal with. The extremes on one side being rigid Puritans, who, rather than appear to yield a little that might secure such a law as would make Sunday peaceable and comfortable for those who have religion enough to observe it properly, prefer to have things as they are, and let drunkenness and disorder increase. I hold such people to be not without blame, for their obstinacy and blindness are, in part, the cause of evils, which their principles condemn. They are conscientious and mean well, but their political wisdom is greatly out of proportion to their zeal and their squeamishness. The other extremes are dreary infidels and scoffing atheists, reinforced by the vicious and the debased, whose regard for Sunday and religion is in inverse ratio to their contempt of the opinions and the quiet of those who reverence such sacred things. They are a bad lot altogether, and deserve no consideration. Between these extremes is the great majority of the people, and they have all varieties of opinion on this Sunday question. Now, legislation must have some sort of conformity to the opinions of the majority. If it is bad to violate principle in the interest of what is called political expediency, it is clear enough that that thing is done in nearly every part of legislation. All Government rests on some sort of compromise; and the test question always is, whether the result of the compromise is better than what would be the condition without it. This test must be applied to the Sunday question.

I believe that those uncompromising zealots whose impracticability, aided by those who desire no limits on license of any sort, will cause a drunken, Sunday-despising generation to come up, and will make the securing of a satisfactory Excise law more difficult years hence than it is now. But in fact this Sunday question may be so disposed of as to violate no man's conscience, and at the same time secure some of the greater blessings of an effective license law. Not a few sensible people, on principle, recoil from licensing the public drinking of intoxicating drinks on Sunday, or what is the same thing, the keeping open of public houses for such purposes on Sunday. They claim such practices to have been unlawful prior to the Excise law of 1856. The really respectable and well-meaning portion of their opponents, who alone should be considered, have no desire to discredit Sunday; and they regard the observance of it, after their own fashion, as beneficial to the individual and as of public utility. They are quite sincere, and they deny the right of the State to so legislate about Sunday as to favor their religious opponents or coerce themselves, so long as they do not interfere with others. They do not wish opportunities to get drunk or to carouse on Sunday. While it is to be regretted that they do not prefer spiritual devotions to common-place amusements on Sunday, let us not forget that such amusements are morally far above the debauchery, or even the concealed gluttony and tippling, which take place in the closed Sunday haunts of many who profess more religion, and of nearly all who enjoy intoxication. These intelligent, orderly, Sunday-rationalists will never be made more religious by coercive legislation; and that Puritical zeal which confounds them with the lovers of vile indulgence is guilty of much more than folly. It drives respectability for self-protection into an abhorred alliance with beastliness. Let the friends of religion make the pulpit, the Press and the schools more effective in bringing these men to a religious frame of mind, but do not try the coercive power of law. It will surely fail and will do much damage besides.

If we look at this matter carefully we shall see that the question about Sunday licensing mainly turns upon the inquiry as to what should be regarded as an intoxicating drink in the legal sense. No one denies that any person under the law of 1856 might either sell or give away on Sunday any beverage or drink that was not fairly classed as intoxicating, of course subject to the old Sunday laws. Few decent people, and none whose opinions are worthy serious regard, will claim that the rum-shops, grog-dens, gin-mills, whisky-cellars, and the hells of drunkenness generally, should be freely open to their howling, reeling, rowdy patrons on the sacred day of worship and repose. The line between what is intoxicating and what is not must be drawn by the law somewhere. No law of nature fixes that line, nor does human experience mark it with much precision. Our Courts have taken evidence for whole days together to enable them to find that line, and have yet closed in some doubt about it. It must, then, be drawn by the statute in the light of conflicting facts; and it must be fixed with quite as much reference to sound policy and useful results as to the physical effects of the beverages thrown upon the one side or the other of that line. There would surely be no occasion for the law to prohibit the sale on Sunday of an intoxicating liquid which the people would never drink; nor is there hardly more occasion to forbid the sale of a liquid barely intoxicating, but which is scarcely responsible for any of the bad results of intemperance. What the law directly aims to prevent is not drinking, or the sale of what might intoxicate, but the public evils of intemperate habits and general drunkenness. We thus reduce the question to an inquiry as to what beverages are so far responsible for the evils of drunkenness and intemperance, publicly exhibited on Sunday, as to require they should be the subject of additional prohibitionary or restrictive Sunday legislation. Let it be borne in mind that it is not proposed to repeal or qualify any existing laws for the protection of the Sabbath. The most extreme advocates of Sunday legislation are therefore called on to make no surrender, either of principle or of a line of an existing Sunday statute. Let them neither delude themselves or others on this point. And I wish them also to believe that I value the Christian observance of Sunday as much as any of them. But I cannot consent to be governed by one narrow idea, however excellent of its kind, in legislation; and I am not ready to allow great, growing evils to continue unchecked because I cannot secure a favorite or even a complete remedy all at once.

Let us now look at the question of forcing morality by law—or, what is the same thing, that of requiring licenses for public drinking places at all. But a small portion of those who resort to the argument that you cannot or should not make people moral by law, use it honestly, or with any conception of what they are saying. It is the common shift of fools, demagogues and the vilest grog-shop keepers. No one claims that the State shall enact that no man shall drink what is intoxicating, or be intemperate or otherwise immoral, or that such a law could be enforced if foolishly enacted. Nor can it be wisely enacted that no man shall lie, or have a dirty home, or eat poison, or build a wooden wall, or refuse to put on clothes, or run the risk of the small-pox, or drive a bull, or be a villain, or a worshipper of crocodiles. But who will for such reasons deny that the laws of the State should favor Christianity rather than crocodile worship; discourage villany by punishing fraud, theft, forgery and pilfering of the public funds; protect the people from the danger of hundreds of wild bulls in the streets of a great city; require those having small-pox or yellow fever not to frequent public gatherings; prohibit the general exposure of nakedness on the public streets; forbid wooden walls in the houses of City blocks; guard the sale of unlabelled poisons by ignorant druggist's clerks; prevent malaria and death from City cellars and cesspools; and punish willful perjury as a crime. On the same basis of preventing the evil of bad example and dangerous inducements to crime, all license laws must in part rest. They may indirectly discourage personal vice, and so far they are to be commended; but their justification is that they limit public crime and pernicious public example. A man may lawfully flourish a sword or use persuasion; but he may not flourish his sword close to my head in a public street; and he may not publish a journal for advising murder, stealings and incendiary fires. So a grog-shop where intoxicating drinks are sold is not a proper subject for public regulation, because some people drink there or even get drunk occasionally; but because it is a perpetual and copious fountain of idleness and broils, fights, pauperism, and of every kind of villainy and crime. And every other class of public drinking places may also be required to be licensed, partly for the already mentioned reason, and in part for other reasons. Being public and not merely private places, and appealing to public support, the public may see that they do not injure its well-being. Asking public support, and needing some attention from public servants, such public resorts may be required to make a public contribution toward the public expense. Every public cab and private draw-man's cart, as well as the building of every well and the putting in of every bath-tub must be licensed. It is strange if what concerns life, health, morality, and the public comfort and peace, should not receive as much public attention. It is clearly just, however, that this public contribution or license fee should be graded in reference both to the oversight such places require, and their general prejudice to the public welfare. Were it practicable, and could it by shown that any of them were nothing but a public injury, they might be wholly prohibited.

A large class of people so regard all the so-called drinking places—and they think it wise to pursue a policy of absolute prohibition. I think this policy unwise, at this time at least; and I am confirmed in that by the New-York law of 1856 resting on a wise theory in the main. It secured much more quiet Sabbaths; it caused a decrease of crime, drunkenness and rowdyism on that and other days; it caused more peaceable and safe City midnights; it gave a large income to the City Treasury; it was steadily causing the most lawless classes to feel some wholesome restraints from a beneficent public authority; it was slowly decreasing the [illegible] giving the [illegible] were be[illegible] which [illegible] table and [illegible] disgrace it, added to give themselves a sort of monopoly of patronage and profit. The greatest objection to that law was that it classed together those who dealt with the most respectable of our more social classes, and those whose places were the vile resorts of degraded beings who delighted in drunkenness and were incapable of rational enjoyment in a social way. It was a sad political blindness and mistake to confound those classes, and to drive them into an unnatural union and a common attack on the law. Let us now apply those principles, and see if we cannot retrieve that error and save most that was good, while yielding what was unwise in that law. It is clear that its repeal was mainly an act of degrading partisan subserviency to the vilest elements of our population, with no reference to the public good, and no other reference to the defects of the law than their actual use to gain the votes of many respectable citizens.

The law of 1856, as every law must, drew a line between the beverages or liquids which it included, and those to which it did not apply; not, indeed, in exact language, but in terms capable of rather precise application. The "intoxicating drinks, wines, ales, beers," of that law included lager-beer, (of all degrees of strength,) and the least intoxicating wines. It was not held to include root-beer, weiss-beer, ginger-pop, soda water, or several other light beverages, that are publicly sold. In my opinion that law included too much. Its list of branded and disreputable and dangerous drinks went down too far toward perfect safety and innocence. It is important to note that every step in such descent increases largely the difference in kind, between what of drinks the law includes and of the persons it affects, and that each of such steps seriously limits the number who will support the law, and as seriously increases the number who will oppose it. In that law this process was carried to the suicidal extent of making those who opposed more numerous than those who supported it; and as a result it nourished the enemies that conspired for its destruction. The remedy, of course, (until a higher moral tone prevails,) is to draw the line along another plane, so as to increase friends and diminish enemies. Let it be drawn so as not to include within the category of intoxicating drinks a mild and wholesome kind of lager-beer, nor, perhaps, some of the lighter and safer wines. The phrase strong beer should be inserted in the law, in the place of beer, simply.

There should be some words of description that could be applied in reference to the strength of this mild lager-beer, and the names and strength of the wines, if any, that are not intended to be included in the list of intoxicating drinks. The Excise Board should have authority to apply tests, and the applying of this test line would be little, if any, more difficult than the application of the distinction between the lager and the other beers made necessary by the law of 1856. The uninoluded lager-beer and wines would soon become well known, and would be as widely discriminated from intoxicating drinks as the patrons of those who drink them, as a temperate incident to temperate social habits would be separated from the patrons of drunken groggeries, who drink as an end, and fight, howl and stab as a consequence.

It seems to me that the wise friends of temperance ought to be able to see that, while a few are reformed by stern resolutions, manfully kept, not to drink at all what may intoxicate, the greater work of temperance reform is being done by the gradual substitution of milder for stronger drinks, and by making drinking at all more and more a matter of incident and less an end of social enjoyment.

That the policy I have suggested would call many from the drinking of strong beer to the more respectable places of light lager-beer, and would encourage the making of a well-defined light lager-beer, and would thus contribute to make the places of drunkenness less frequented and their political supporters less powerful, I cannot doubt. In the most temperate countries light lager-beer is most used; and if the Sunday is not there so well observed at could be wished, it has been from ecclesiastical and political causes of long continuance quite disconnected from the social habits of the people. Bigotry and oppression made infidels and worked their other evils irrespective of beer or beer-gardens. We do most to preserve our religious Sundays by dealing most wisely with these questions between beer and brandy.

A few words are next required as to the form and conditions of licenses. The licenses given under the law of 1856 are appropriate for use under the amended law I propose. And it is something to the credit of the theory of their use, that amid so much City corruption, the many millions levied under them was fully collected and honestly accounted for. The licenses for selling intoxicating drinks, for the reasons I have already explained, should be relatively high. A license for the sale of lager and other beverages, to be classed as non-intoxicating, (under the amended law,) should be imperatively required. The reason for requiring such licenses I have already referred to. No sale without a license should be allowed. This form of license should be very distinct from those for intoxicating drinks, and should be called the "light beer license." There might be a graded scale of fees under it, but the fees should be relatively small. The license should be required not only because some payment is due as a just return for the special police attention every such place of public resort requires, but more especially because the Excise Board ought to have full and clear jurisdiction to ascertain whether anything classed as intoxicating is sold at the place licensed. As what may be sold under this "light beer license" is not regarded as especially dangerous, the special Sunday provisions of the law are to have no bearing upon the places having such license; the general Sunday laws would apply. General refreshments could be included under such licenses. Such light beer licensed places are to be regarded as soda-fountain shops, bakeries, cigar-shops, newspaper stands, and dining saloons are now regarded, that is, they are all to be subject to existing Sunday laws. But to prevent those places holding "light beer licenses" degenerating into resorts for intemperance and other vices, they should be subject to these conditions: The Excise Board should have stringent powers for the revocation of the licenses, and for the regulation of the places; the holders of such licenses should have no right to sell or allow to be sold on the premises at any time anything classified as intoxicating, and no place should be given a light beer license within at least two hundred and fifty feet of where any place should be licensed to sell intoxicating drinks under the new law. It would lead to inextricable confusion and be a dangerous temptation to allow the holders of light beer licenses to sell intoxicating drinks at any time. These is that relative to the [illegible]ition of the Excise Board, and it is plain the City needs a special Excise law and Board as much as it needs a special charter, Quarantine law, or Fire Department law. Nothing could be more pernicious, than to have that Board elective by popular vote, or appointed by an elected Mayor. Thousands of votes would, by voters, be conditioned on licenses and rates of licensed, and the giving of low licenses and low rates would be promised by candidates as a condition of support at the polls. The Board of 1856 was effective because it was neither elective nor created by officers whom the votes of publicans could directly elect or turn out of office. The old Excise Board might perhaps be as good as can be selected if its composition and mode of creation remained substantially unchanged for the worse. It seems to me that the President of the Excise Board should have the main powers of a Magistrate for preserving order at excise trials. The ends of order and of safety in the city, which an Excise law mainly enacted to attain, are ends which the State as well as the city is bound to secure; and it would make the Excise Board all the more effective, and party influence would be better balanced, if some members of the Board were given office directly by the Governor and Senate, or by the latter. This would relieve some of the Police and Excise Board, who are severely taxed. There are also objections to those Boards being solely responsible for the doings of a Board of Excise. I am confident that a law based on such views would promote the well-being of the public; would improve the chances of a more religious observance of Sunday, and would not divide or otherwise weaken the political power of the people, which must co-operate at the cost of some compromise of individual opinions to secure any beneficial legislation. Of those sophistical insinuations of demagogues that any difference between the classification of the most fiery rum and the mildest lager-beer is yielding to the Germans, and an insult to the Irish, I have only this to say, that my suggestions have regard to practices and consequences, irrespective of any creed, politics, or nationality; and that if they show less respect for the man who gets drunk on rum, and reels and fights at midnight and on Sundays, than for the man who soberly drinks lager-beer and goes soberly home without howling or fighting, they express precisely my feelings and opinions, and precisely such feelings and opinions as should influence every legislator. But those opinions are based not at all on nationality, but wholly on private worth and public consequences. Neither is it just to our Irish people who have furnished so many excellent citizens, and from among whom so many are doing noble work at this time in the cause of reform, to class them as the special patrons of rum and whisky. We must make common laws for all our citizens, whether of native or foreign birth, and irrespective of the country from which they come, or the creed or want of a creed, or the social habits which they bring. It seems to me the fair time has arrived when those disgraceful objections to a legislative act that it is not as convenient for the vilest Irish drunkard as it is for the most reputable German citizen, ought from decency to cease. At any rate, the line seems likely to be more plainly drawn between those who pander for the votes of the one and those who command the respect of the other.

Now that we can make a law which will deserve the support, as it will promote the well-being, of all, let us scorn altogether the opposition of demagogues, of drunkards, and of fanatics of whatever nationality.

A Missouri Man on Schurz and Missouri Affairs.

The Tribune publishes the following letter, but admits that it uses the writer's name without authority:

In a recent issue of the Tribune a communication appeared over the signature of WM. H. GROSVENOR, of New-York, formerly of Missouri, representing the recent so-called Liberal Convention in Missouri to have been a large and significant gathering representing an important and powerful element of the Republican Party in that State. The manifest object of that communication, in view of the actual facts, clearly was to encourage the organization of similar movements in opposition to the regular organization of the party elsewhere. That nobody may be deceived by the absurd statement of Mr. GROSVENOR's letter, I ask a brief space in your columns for a reply.

First, it should be known that your correspondent, Mr. GROSVENOR, is an agent of the Free-trade League, receiving a salary of $6,000 a year for doing the work of that mercenary organization. The tendency of Republican opinion in the direction of Protection, and of Democratic opinion in the opposite direction, make it the policy of the Free-trade leaders to break down the Republican Party and to build up the Democratic Party. And Mr. GROSVENOR, in seeking to disrupt the Republican Party, is simply doing the work assigned him by his employers. The pretensions of fidelity to party principles, which he sets up, are only a cloak to conceal his real purpose. Only to mislead those who have no sympathy with the Free-trade Democracy. It is too short a time since he was an active lobbyist at Jefferson City to secure the election of FRANK BLAIR to the Senate over Ex-Senator JOHN B. HENDERSON, for him to successfully play the rôle he now assumes. That he did, by adroit tact and management, succeed in turning Missouri over into the hands of the Democracy, is of course admitted; but that he now has any standing or influence in that State, or that any considerable number of those Republicans who supported the Grats Brown movement in 1870 were represented in Mr. GROSVENOR's Convention, or have any sympathy with its purposes, I emphatically deny. And I propose to show that this Convention was the veriest myth and sham, designed only to affect and mislead public sentiment abroad.

And, first, I assert that there is not a single known Republican in the State who supported the regular organization in 1870 who has abandoned it since. So that the Liberal organization has gained no strength from that source. On the contrary, I assert that nearly all of the leading Republicans of the State who participated in the bolt in 1870 have now abandoned it, and that it is utterly without even a respectable appearance in strength. For proof of this I have only to refer to the proceedings of the State Convention held yesterday, which appointed delegates to the Philadelphia Convention. The leaders of the Liberal wing in 1870 were Senator Schurz, Wm. M. Grosvenor, Grats Brown, Lieut.-Gov. Brandt, Gov. Gulich, Speaker of the House of Representatives D. P. Dyer, B. Gratz Boyd and G. A. Finkelnburg, members from the Ninth, Fourth and Third Districts; John B. Henderson, Ex-United States Senator; Ex-Gov. Thomas C. Fletcher, Samuel Hays, State Treasurer; J. O. Dollmeyer, Auditor; Nathaniel Pitcher, J. K. Clemmons, Geo. R. Smith and Judge Fox. All of these men, except the first three—Schurz, Grosvenor, and Brown—participated in the Convention of yesterday. Two-thirds of the Liberal Committee joined with the regular Committee in calling the Convention; and all over the State the County Conventions were characterized by unusual enthusiasm and harmony, and the fact that there had ever been a bolt was scarcely perceptible, except in the generous rivalry of both wings to manifest their determination to forgive and forget. It is not stating the fact too strongly to say that the men who were the late supporters of BROWN and SCHURZ are almost unanimous in condemning the Convention which Mr. GROSVENOR labors so hard to make appear to have represented somebody.

About one-third of the Republican newspapers of the State supported the bolt of 1870. Of these, only two (before Mr. GROSVENOR's Convention) which I am aware, accord with the regular Convention of yesterday. One of the two papers referred to is Senator SCHURZ's, and the other is the State Times, which the Democracy have secured by giving the publisher a half interest in the State printing.

SCHURZ is almost entirely abandoned by the Republicans, (whom he deceived in 1870. Nor is it strange that this is so. They believed him in good faith. But the Grats Brown Administration is essentially a Democratic one. Its influence helped to send FRANK BLAIR to the Senate, while nearly all the appointees have been the most extreme Democrats—the last one being the appointment of a Democrat to the Supreme Bench of the State, a Democrat who was defeated by the nomination of the Democracy for the same place in 1869.

Yours, JOHN H. CLARK, JR.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 26, 1872.

The capital of Mississippi is a pretty little city, resembling in size and neatness a cosy New-England village. Yet in its social and political associations the contrast is decidedly striking, and one feels it in the absence of the hum of industry which belongs to the settlements of the native Yankees. In the palmy days of slavery, Jackson seems to have been the resort of the dainty society of aristocratic seekers and rich planters, who lived in baronial exclusiveness from the toil and sweat of the mortgaged slave and nursing cotton-crop. What a change! In one short decade the poor slave becomes the Secretary of State, or wrestles with the keenest lawyers on parliamentary rule and usage as speaker of the House. Hon. JOHN R. LYNCH, at present Speaker of the House of Representatives, was born in Louisiana, opposite Natchez, in the year 1847, of a slave mother. His father, being a man of considerable wealth, had made arrangements, while Mr. LYNCH was yet a child, to have him and his mother set at liberty; but dying suddenly, the arrangements were not carried out, and they were treacherously held in bondage till the results of the war made them free. While a slave, Mr. LYNCH had that unquenchable thirst for knowledge which is so often the case with his race; but the vile prejudices of slavery prevented his smuggling anything more into his brain than an imperfect ability to read and write. By a change of owners his mother was taken to Natchez with her children, where she has since resided. In fact, while the Federal troops were in possession of Natchez, Mr. LYNCH enjoyed the opportunity of attending a night-school for four months, which is all the advantage of public education he has ever been able to enjoy. How he has successfully struggled to make up for his former conditions and disadvantages may be best seen in the able and dignified manner in which he presides over the House, and in the general knowledge and cultivated bearing displayed in his social intercourse with his many friends. The Democratic side of the House has several clever and wary parliamentarians, and when they find it impossible to defeat a bill, often challenge the Speaker on some of the most intricate points of order and parliamentary law; but the coolness and sagacity with which he disposes of all points is really astonishing, and he has won the admiration and respect of the entire House. In private life, however, his position is hardly better than of old, so strong is the power of prejudice. It requires no great amount of reflection, while viewing matters and things here in the South, to satisfy oneself why the present Administration is so feared and dreaded. It is only the iron will of an honest man that can restrain the crouching forces whose only hope in the re-establishment of caste and despotism rests on faint-hearedness and vacillation in the Presidential chair.

Having been thrown in contact with a Southern Democrat some time ago, his mind became greatly relieved on expressing his high esteem for HORACE GREELEY, and was free to intimate that if nominated for the Presidency he could command a heavy Southern vote. The ground of said high esteem was the fact that during Mr. GREELEY's visit in the South he took special pleasure in announcing his hatred for Northern carpet-baggers. "This," remarked my friend, "and his fair-mindedness during the bitter trials of Jeff. Davis, have won for him many friends in the South." If Mr. GREELEY could be in Jackson today, and listen to the testimony in relation to the Meridian riot, he could but feel how enviable is such esteem. Some people seem to have fairness toward the South so much at heart, that they delight to parade the worst view of every question before the Northern public. Every man coming from the North is here stigmatized as a carpet-bagger, when the truth is that many of them have brought all their capital, and are working hard to build up the country. Does any one suppose it would be better if the Legislatures of the South were in the hands of its old masters? The detested Northerners have planted school-houses all over the State of Mississippi. Some counties that never supported a free school before are now enjoying the enlightening influence of forty or fifty, and the negroes are pouring into them. The negroes are not slow to see the signs of the times. They have so often since the war been the victims of terrorism, that they instinctively turn away from the Southern Democrats, and if President GRANT is renominated they will vote for him as a unit, provided they can be made to feel safe on the day of election. The House has just unseated two Democrats from Lauderdale County. Having accomplished what was possible through intimidation, some twenty-seven colored voters were decoyed away by an officer of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company on the day before the election, and prevented from returning on the day of election. The Democrats labored hard to disprove the charges, but the colored members seemed to understand the situation, and by a party vote the contestants were sworn in and took their seats.

The most vexatious feature in the condition of the State is the depreciation of its credit. The State liquidates its indebtedness by giving the creditor a kind of draft called a State warrant, payable at the State Treasury. When this warrant is presented it is cashed at par with greenbacks, provided there be ready money on hand. This seldom being the case the holder is obliged to sell his warrant on the street, where it is worth from fifty to seventy cents on the dollar. The office holders entitled to receive these warrants as bona fide payments, but refuses to cash them at par with currency. The banker, however, who buys the warrants at seventy cents employs spies, who spring upon the treasury as soon as a dollar of greenbacks reaches it. How long this unjust grab-game will be tolerated I will not undertake to say. A bill will soon come before the Legislature looking to the funding of the State warrants, and the collection of the taxes in greenbacks. Mississippi, with her reputation antecedents, has at best a poor financial reputation; but the present condition of things will entirely ruin the State and furnish good Democratic capital for the next election if not corrected. Before the war the principal wealth was in slaves. The results of the war left many of the planters almost penniless. Unable to sell their great plantations, or to pay the taxes thereon, many fell to the State in default of payment. Having no capital to employ the thousands of freedmen, things drifted along at the mercy of circumstances. Many of the finest cotton-growing sections of the State are today lying idle for want of capital to work them. People who have brought capital and industry from the North and East feel that they have as good a right in the Legislature as any one, if legally elected. The negro repose confidence in them, and they are doing much to restore the prosperity of the State. But, in the eyes of the Southern Democratic Press, they are one and all shewing carpet-baggers. If the negroes choose to place their confidence in the Northerner than the Southerner, he has a perfect right to his choice; but it will require a whole generation before the dictatorial spirit of the old institution has subsided into that calm and generous tone of feeling which accords equal rights and fair play to all.

New-York Herald, March 2.

Of course he was aided by Mr. SCHURZ and Mr. TRUMBULL. These two Senators come to us as the apostles of a new dispensation. They preach reform, freedom from the vices of patronage, "liberal" republicanism. Others may delve in the fleshpots; they confine themselves to cakes and ale. Mr. SCHURZ is a phenomenon in our politics. A cabal of Cheap Jack correspondents and editors have called upon us to accept this shifting German as a great man and a wonderful orator. We admit that he has been studying the English language for eighteen years and speaks it fluently; but there are professional couriers who carry ladies' bandboxes over the Continent who speak more regular Continental than Mr. SCHURZ. We have more honored by the Republican Party than this Senator. He began to crave office about the time he got into his English grammar, and he has managed to keep well in office. He was made Minister to Spain, and failed to achieve any remembered reputation in Madrid. He was made a Brigadier-General, but he got out of the ranks with no more fame than a thousand other Generals, who quietly took off their swords and went into trade. He edited a newspaper and failed in that. In time he was thrown into the Senate, where he has only succeeded in an incessant, sharp, shallow, quick-witted babble on the Senate floor, a speech which will last beyond the mortality of the Democratic Party in this campaign. We do not esteem our Senator as an astounding [illegible]

[illegible] the collection of mediocrities. We have no Senator who will compare with Mr. GLADSTONE, Mr. DISRAELI, Mr. BRIGHT or Mr. LOWE, and he is far from Mr. SUMNER being the marvel of lowers insist upon regarding him, he is inferior to SUMNER, THURMAN, EDMUNDS, CONKLING, MORRILL or FERRY, and is really about a match for MORTON or FRANK BLAIR. We mean that he is a match for MORTON or BLAIR in intellectual resources. As an eager, freaky, perpetual talker, always obtruding upon the Senate with a speech or an interruption, he is only surpassed by GARRETT DAVIS. He can truly say with TERENCE, "Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever."

And as for Mr. TRUMBULL, we dismiss him as a politician who followed immediately in the traces of the Republican Party until the incense-bearers tempted him off with hopes of the Presidency. A politician who reformed at sixty and publishes himself as a "statesman" may excite our curiosity, but scarcely our enthusiasm. These are the conspirators and conspirators who have held the country at their mercy for three weeks, delaying public business, spending the people's money and bringing the good name and good faith of the nation into disrepute, merely to defeat Gen. GRANT. Their allies are found in disappointed politicians like GREELEY, who abandons a tariff man like GRANT to aid in the nomination and election of a Free-trader; or like PARTON, who has been spending with some high-toned air since he and his litter were turned out of the troughs of the Custom-house; or like three or four pretentious newspapers in the East and West, who advertise their obstinacy for independence, and proclaim that no virtue remains in journalism but what they happily possess; that they alone are uncorrupted and unbought; that, thanks be to God, like the Pharisees of old, they are not as other journals are! We really do not know whether the feeling excited by this comedy of scandal and ambition is one of amusement or contempt. We are amused when we see these strollers from the Republican Party establish a side show, and advertise themselves as real, new patriots, with gorgeous costumes and machinery and decorations, and that their play is the only legitimate drama, while the performances at Philadelphia is sensational and unworthy. But we cannot refrain from a feeling of contempt when we see the Senate of the United States surrounded to the intrigues of politicians who have no grievance against GRANT that does not arise from disappointed ambition.

Behind these men there is a public opinion which is as true to GRANT as it was true to JACKSON when CALHOUN and CLAY and WEBSTER thundered at him in the Senate. The people stood by JACKSON against the politicians, and he triumphed. The people are standing by GRANT, and we are profoundly convinced that he will have a triumph as conspicuous and splendid as was awarded the hero of New-Orleans.

THE WICKENBURG MASSACRE.

A Defense of Col. O'Beirne by a Brother Officer—What He Says About Kruger.

The following letter, by a regular officer is published by the Army and Navy Journal, and it affords some additional facts in relation to the conduct of Col. O'BEIRNE, hitherto the subject of much dispute:

SIR: I take advantage of your offer to publish any corrections of the letter which appeared in your issue of the 6th inst., over the signature of one "Wm. Kruger, 6th clerk in Dept. C. M. Fostre, Assistant Quartermaster United States Army," deeming it but my duty to contradict the statement which, so unjustly reflects on an officer of my regiment. Being personally ignorant of everything connected with the attack on the Wickenburg stage, and the subsequent treatment of Mr. KRUGER and Miss SHEPHARD by Capt. R. F. O'BEIRNE, 3d Cavalry, then commanding this post, and I can only state to you that there is not a particle, not a shadow of foundation or truth in anything Mr. KRUGER states in his letter, excepting the mere circumstances of the stage attack and the particulars of the untimely death of poor Mr. Lorenz. The facts in the case are simply these: Word was received at the post about 8 A. M. on Monday morning, Nov. 6, 1871, that the stage which left Prescott on the 4th for California had been attacked about seven miles from Wickenburg, and that six persons had been killed and two wounded. Col. O'BEIRNE at once sent Capt. CHARLES MEINHOLD, Third Cavalry, with Lieut. SIMPSON and some twenty odd enlisted men to the scene of the attack, with instructions to follow the trail, and, if possible, discover the perpetrators of the attack, it being at the time a matter of grave doubt whether the attack was made by Indians or Mexicans. He also sent the post surgeon, Dr. EVANS, to Wickenburg to assist in attending to the wounded. The latter returned late the following day, bringing with him the two wounded passengers, Mr. WM. KRUGER and his sister Antonia, Miss MOLLIE SHEPHARD, a Prescott prostitute and keeper of a house of ill-fame, with whom he was traveling. Mr KRUGER, who was but slightly wounded, was invited by Col. O'BEIRNE to place himself under the doctor's care at the post hospital, while Miss SHEPHARD was taken by the doctor to the quarters of one of the laundresses. Everything was done for these people that it was possible to do. Mr. KRUGER occupied the quarters of an officer who was temporarily absent from the post, and received every attention while he remained. Miss SHEPHARD was sent by my wife, through the doctor, that anything she might need in the way of wearing apparel was at her service. Mr. KRUGER, however, seemed to be much offended that his companion was not shown more attention or taken into the quarters of one of the officers; and as far as I am personally concerned, I confess I would much rather have shown this attention to her than him, she being a poor unfortunate woman, while Mr. KRUGER is an intelligent man, who had already so far degraded himself that Capt. C. W. FOSTER, whose chief clerk he was, discharged him, and that his own brother—so at least I am informed by reliable parties—would not condescend to speak to him while at Ehrenberg.

There being no proper place in the post for Miss SHEPHARD, Col. O'BEIRNE told the Doctor that as soon as she was well enough to be moved he would prefer if he (the Doctor) would have her removed to Mr. GILSON's ranche, a comfortable house about two miles from the post, but on the reservation, where she would be in every way better off, and where the post-surgeon could go every day to attend her. About a week after the arrival of the "two surviving cripples," the Doctor reported the woman well enough to be moved, and they (Mr. KRUGER of his own accord, and Miss SHEPHARD under escort) went to Mr. GILSON's, where Dr. EVANS attended them daily for several weeks, and until they were well enough to leave.

There is another point in Mr. KRUGER's statements that I desire to contradict. I quote from the letter published in the Journal of the 6th:

"That I left my mark upon the Indians there is no doubt, because two Indians died from gunshot wounds at Camp Date Creek Reservation; but the commanding officer refused to have the thing investigated, for fear he would find sufficient evidence that they were his pets—that is, Camp Date Creek Indians. At all events there is no doubt whatever that the outrage was committed by Indians; and that by Camp Date Creek Indians, those so-called friendly Indians whom Uncle Sam feeds. These citizens tracked the Indians from the place of outrage to Camp Date Creek."

Being myself issuing Commissary for the Indians here—Apache-Yumas and Apache-Mojaves, of whom come daily to the post to draw his rations from me, and knowing from my intercourse with them each individual Indian, I can positively assure you that no Indian or Indians have ever died from gun-shot wounds on this reservation, and as on his arrival here, I particularly noticed Mr. Kruger's pistol, from which not one single shot had been discharged, and which did not present the appearance of having been recently reloaded, I am very much inclined to think that he did not "leave his mark with the Indians."

I am furthermore prepared to testify to the fact that every effort was made by Col. O'BEIRNE to discover if these so-called Camp Date Creek Indians were the guilty parties. The iron loop of a mail-sack was found with one of them, and at once sent to the Postmaster at Wickenburg, Arizona Territory, for identification, who returned it saying that the mail-sacks on the ill-fated stages were only cut open, but no part of them was missing; some new legal-tender notes were found upon another and taken from him, but were afterward identified by Mr. CHARLES B. GENING, of People's Valley, as money he had paid this Indian for work done upon his ranche; every effort, in fact, was made, but nothing was elicited to fix the crime upon the Indians here.

Not only this, but Col. O'BEIRNE also went in person to Wickenburg and collected the effects of the deceased, which he forwarded to Lieut. WHEELER, Corps of Engineers, from whom he received a very handsome letter in reply.

In regard to the statement that the trail led from the place of attack to Camp Date Creek, I say that Capt. MEINHOLD, Third Cavalry, went to the place of attack and took up the trail, which took the direction of this post for about one mile, and then turned south-east and continued in almost the opposite direction from this place.

I have already taken up more of your space than I at first intended, for the unblemished and Christian character of Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. R. F. O'BEIRNE is too well known throughout the army, to be stained with the mire thrown at him by Mr. KRUGER, but as his (KRUGER'S) letter has been extensively published and commented upon by the Press, I merely wish, in justice to a brother officer, to correct the foul slander. FRED. H. E. BESTEIRE,

Second Lieutenant Twenty-first Infantry.

CAMP DATE CREEK, A. T., Jan. 28, 1872.

Lumber Trade of Canada.

From the Quebec Mercury.

Few persons among us have any adequate idea of the enormous proportions of the lumber trade of the Dominion. Take for instance the trade of the valleys of the St. Lawrence and the tributary valleys. The Ottawa valley provided during the past season 100,000,000 feet of sawn deals, 200,000,000 feet of sawn boards, and the St. Lawrence Valley provided 200,000,000 feet of sawn deals and 150,000,000 of sawn boards. In the Ottawa Valley the proposed cut out of logs was 2,200,000, and in the St. Lawrence 2,250,000. The exports for the years 1870 and 1871 show a favorable condition of affairs, and lead still further to be assured of the magnitude of the lumber interest of the Dominion.

A PHILADELPHIA BURGLAR.

The Goods Traced to This City—Arrest of an Alleged Receiver—A Brave-Third and His Plunder.

On the 14th of February last the store of Jas. M. Coz, No. 701 Chestnut-street, Philadelphia, who is the agent in that city for Messrs. E. A. JAFFRAY & Co., No. 208 Broadway, was entered by burglars, and a large quantity of silks, satins and laces, amounting in value to $6,201, was carried off. Mr. Coz at once notified JAFFRAY & Co., who apprised the Central Detective Office of the robbery. Detectives DUSENBURY and DUNNE were placed in charge of the matter, and on Saturday they received information that in their opinion a warrant could be found at the store of FRANK R. PAGE, a dealer in jewelry, watches, &c., at the corner of Broadway and Washington-place. In connection with the store Mr. PAGE, it is said, keeps a loan office. The detectives, on Saturday, obtained from Justice Hogan, at the Tombs, a search warrant and searched Mr. PAGE's establishment. On making the search the officers found in the place a quantity of silks and laces at the value of $2,400, which answered the description of the goods stolen from the Philadelphia store. The property was taken possession of, and PAGE was taken to Police Head-quarters, where he was locked up. The goods were subsequently identified by JAFFRAY & Co. as their property, and as a portion of the goods stolen from their branch establishment in the Quaker City.

During the search of PAGE's establishment the detectives found a black leather traveling-bag, which being opened was found to contain three lady's cloaks of great value. One is a fur cape of fine quality; the second a velvet cloak, trimmed with rich lace and bugle trimming, and the third is a heavy black silk cloak. PAGE on being questioned said that a lad whom he did not know had left the valise and contents at his place, but subsequently informed the detectives that a short time after the lad had left the store a man came in and offered to sell him the cloaks, but he refused to buy them and told the man to take them away. From a description given by PAGE, the detectives arrested GEO. WALKER, alias Walker Warren, whom they describe as a professional house-thief, and who was fully identified by PAGE as the person who had offered to sell him the cloaks. PAGE and WALKER were arraigned before Justice HOGAN yesterday, and remanded to await examination, which will take place at noon today at the Tombs. In the meantime the cloaks, which have doubtless been stolen, remain in the hands of the Police. It is stated by Deputy Police Commissioner Jourdan, of the Detective Police, that Central Office is Mulberry-street. Ladies who may have been recently robbed of such articles would do well to call and examine them.

Horrible Railroad Accident.

At 4½ o'clock yesterday morning an unknown man, while endeavoring to cross the railroad track at Eleventh-avenue and Fifty-third-street, was knocked down and run over by a freight train of the Hudson River Railroad and instantly killed. His body was severed in two parts and horribly mangled. The remains were gathered up by the Police and sent to the Morgue for identification. The deceased appeared to be about twenty-five years of age, had dark mustache and short-cropped brown hair, and was attired in black clothes. There was nothing about the body that would serve as a clue to establish the identity of the unfortunate man. Coroner YOUNG has assumed charge of the case.

Fire in West Thirty-third-street—A Lad Burned to Death.

Shortly before 1 o'clock yesterday morning a fire broke out in the brick stable situated in the rear of Nos. 215, 217, 219, and 221 West Thirty-third-street, owned by THOMAS O'BRIEN and occupied by a number of different parties. An alarm was quickly given, and the firemen responding promptly, the fire was extinguished before more than $1,000 damage had been sustained. A horse belonging to MAURICE K. FULLER, valued at $200, was burned. The police occupants of the stables sustained losses to the extent of $1,000. After the fire had been extinguished, and the firemen and Police were searching the premises, it was discovered that Moses JACKSON, a lad about twelve years of age, had been burned to death in a hollow place in the hay-loft. The lad was in the employ of a gentleman who had his horses stabled in the premises, and lived in the neighborhood of Thirty-fifth-street and First-avenue. After he had finished his labors on Saturday evening he concluded that, owing to the storm, he would not go home, but went to sleep in the hay-loft, where he met his death. Coroner YOUNG has been notified to hold an inquest.

The Bank return published this morning exhibits the relative strength of the movement in respect to the lawful Money held, as against the circulation and deposits, to which we add the position of the movement the week before, and also of the movement of the corresponding week last year:

	Feb. 24, '72.	March 2, '72.	March 4, '71.
Deposits	$212,728,200	$216,672,200	$225,028,874
Circulation	29,148,700	29,149,400	28,888,252
Total	$241,877,900	$245,821,600	$253,917,126

Gold and Gold Notes	17,111,000	18,255,000	24,322,207
Excess	$2,640,525	$2,454,400	$18,172,011
Rate for money	7 p. ct.	7 p. ct.	4@6 p. ct.

In point of lawful Money strength the Bank movement, on the return of the week, shows no improvement, the surplus over the required 25 per cent. being not quite $2,500,000. The Banks lose in Greenbacks $1,972,500, and gain in Gold Notes $442,000. The decrease on the general line of Deposits is $2,945,400. The loans are nearly the same as last week—$208,400 less.

The course of Currency during the week seems to have been against the City. The Sub-Treasury Currency balance has run down $9,757,600 since Saturday week, and this with the loss of Greenbacks in Bank, makes a total of $5,080,100. The Money market worked close through the week at 7 ₱ cent. on call loan, and 7@9 ₱ cent. on first-class Merchant paper. The Banks as a rule are too near the line of safety to increase their Loans, but the offerings from private lenders on the Street tend to keep the market reasonably steady at 7 ₱ cent. among the Brokers. On this calculation the British interest in speculation on the Stock Exchange, against a sharp Bearish opposition, has advanced the New-York and Western Railroads from one to two ₱ cent., and the Miscellaneous Stocks from one to three ₱ cent.; the most active of the latter being Pacific Mail, and the largest rise on Canton and Quicksilver. Gold, on the other hand, is ⅛@¼ ₱ cent. lower than at the close of the previous week, and the Public Funds a fraction lower on the 5-20s of 1867. Exchange on London also left off weaker both on 60 days and sight bills. The present week will probably test the supply of Exchange to cover the collection of the 5-20 Bonds of 1862 called for redemption March 7, and of which four-fifths (or $16,000,000) have been held in Europe six or eight years. The proposition of this sum already taken up by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in London, in the adjustment of the New Loan, is not yet known at the Department, as Mr. RICHARDSON has not returned. The amount presented here for prepayment is comparatively small. The regular redemptions will begin at Washington on Thursday next.

The Import Trade of the week is remarkable for the largest entries of Dry Goods and the heaviest total known in the history of the port for any single week. The total is $14,600,718, and almost equally divided between Foreign Dry Goods and Foreign General Merchandise. The Customs duties paid into the Treasury the week before, amounting to the unprecedented total of $2,000,000, demonstrated the heavy returns which they promised, as much a few days. The amount of Goods of all kinds taken for immediate consumption is nearly equal to the original entries, showing a trade demand for the Spring season about 20 ₱ cent. ahead of last Spring, which was regarded as then unusually prosperous. The increase in Foreign Dry Goods alone is full thirty ₱ cent., and the Customs thereon increase in the same proportion, the duties being the same as in 1871. The following comparative values of Foreign Dry Goods marketed at New-York since the New-Year are drawn from Custom-house data. The figures may be found by the Free Trade Leaguers in the Journal of Commerce, if they like that authority better than our own. They might possibly make a more satisfactory "Tariff for revenue" to suit their own purpose of lower duties on British fabrics, but we doubt whether in the light of the present experience they could shake a more productive one—certainly not without soon overwhelming the country with goods and debt.

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

BANKING HOUSE OF FISK & HATCH,
No. 5 NASSAU-STREET,
NEW-YORK, March 2, 1872.

WE ARE SELLING THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD FIRST MORTGAGE SIX PER CENT. GOLD BONDS at the rate of 94 and accrued interest. They are in denominations of $1,000, $500 and $100, registered, or with coupons attached; interest payable May and November in United States gold coin; principal payable in 1885, also in gold coin. Bonds delivered by express, charges paid.

These bonds, besides being the formal obligations of a well-established, substantial and thoroughly responsible corporation, comprising among its officers and directors some of the most experienced and trusted capitalists and business men of the country, are also secured by a mortgage lien upon the whole great railroad line, equipment, property and franchises, whose cost and value will not be less than thirty millions, and which is destined, at an early day, to have a productive value of nearly double this sum.

The Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad connects the deep-water navigation of the Chesapeake Bay with the head of reliable inland navigation on the Ohio River. It is 427 miles, of which nearly three-fourths is already in operation, and the remainder under such rapid construction that it will be completed during the ensuing Summer.

This line furnishes a short and remarkably easy route for travel and transportation between the Great West and the Atlantic coast and as such will share, on advantageous terms, in a large extent in the vast volume of through business from the West which now taxes all existing means of transit. By means of connecting lines now under construction in Ohio and Kentucky, it will afford the shortest and cheapest route between Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Chicago, Nashville, Memphis, and the Far West and the North Atlantic shipping; and is twice as once lake rank, therefore, as one of the Great Trunk Roads of the country for through transportation.

Besides these advantages it traverses the RICHEST AND MOST EXTENSIVE COAL DEPOSITS in the country, in its route through the KANAWHA VALLEY, and crosses, in its course, some of the most important and valuable deposits of iron ore known on this Continent. The coal, of which there are three varieties, will furnish an enormous and profitable traffic; and there is no doubt that a large manufacturing activity will soon be developed along the line.

$1,000 bond costs (with the back interest) today $950 50.
$500 bond costs (with the back interest) today $476 25.

We buy and sell GOVERNMENT AND CENTRAL PACIFIC BONDS, and receive them in exchange for CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO BONDS at their current prices. Descriptive pamphlets, with full information, furnished on application.

We receive deposits and allow interest at the rate of four per cent. on balances; make collections in all parts of the country; issue certificates of deposit, and do a general banking business.

PROGRESS OF THE NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

ITS 7.30 BONDS.

The Northern Pacific Road is now (March, 1872,) finished 255 miles—from Duluth, on Lake Superior, to Fargo, at the crossing of the Red River of the North, on the Eastern border of Dakota. Regular trains are running over the completed section. The work is rapidly progressing Westward through Dakota. The track is contracted to be finished in early Autumn (1872) to the Missouri River, at the crossing of which the Road will connect with the lines of steamers running 700 miles further West to Fort Benton, and will thus at once command the large carrying trade of Montana, and the traffic of the Upper Missouri Country.

In the meantime work has been steadily progressing on the Pacific Coast. A section of twenty-five miles was finished in December last, and is now in operation, while forty miles more are under construction—connecting the Columbia River, (at Kalama,) with the terminal point on Puget Sound. During the past year careful surveys have been made of nearly the entire distance across the continent, which fully verify previous estimates of the exceedingly favorable character of the route and country. The work of construction will continue to be pushed both eastward and westward with such rapidity as the interests of the road may warrant. Including the purchased lines of the St. Paul and Pacific Railroad, the Northern Pacific Company now has under its management five hundred and seventy-five miles of finished track. Contracts are let, and the means provided for the construction of several hundred miles more during 1872 in Minnesota, Dakota and Washington Territory.

As its First Mortgage Gold Bonds the Northern Pacific Railroad Company furnishes to the Public an Investment Security which combines the ready Negotiability, the Convenience, and the high Credit of a first-class Railroad Bond, with the Solidity and Safety of a Real Estate Mortgage on land worth at least twice the amount loaned.

They are offered at Par in currency, and yield a HANDSOME PROFIT to those exchanging 6-20s.

They are free of United States tax, and both principal and interest are payable in gold coin, at the office of Jay Cooke & Co.

One Million of these Bonds were sold during February, and over a million and a half during January, which is conclusive proof that they are favorites with the Investing Public.

The redemption of 5-20s by the Treasury indicates low rates of interest to the public creditors hereafter, and as $10,000,000 more are called in for March, we strongly recommend to the holders thereof an immediate exchange for the 7.30 GOLD BONDS of the NORTHERN PACIFIC Railroad.

All marketable securities received in exchange.

Renewed enterprise will be exhibited in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the Semi-weekly editions; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings at the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly precluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

We publish today the last of the series of "Chapters on Reform," by "Non-Partisan." The present chapter deals with the sale of intoxicating liquors, and makes many valuable suggestions. If we had been permitted to give the name of the author of these articles, they could scarcely fail to have had personal weight with the public; but their own merit has attracted to them general attention, and we trust that the author may be induced to continue his "chapters" at an early day.

ANDREW JOHNSON'S was the last example we have had of a "mixed" Administration. It was very much such a one as we should get from a President elected by Democrats and disappointed Republicans. Under JOHNSON'S Administration, during fifteen months, sixty-seven millions of dollars less taxes were collected than during the same time, with the same laws, under GRANT'S Administration. Do the people like the contrast?

Mr. GRAHAM, the counsel for STOKES, has been subjected to a good deal of attack for making an effort to obtain a fair trial for his client. His remarks about the danger of violence being attempted in open Court have been construed as a sign of fear—an imputation which Mr. GRAHAM can well afford to bear. The truth is that the Court has been crowded every day with the hangers-on of Erie, and threats of violence have been as plentiful as blackberries in Summer. Let people who are disposed to make reflections on Mr. GRAHAM remember that the proceedings, thus far, have taken place before Judge CARDOZO. Verbum sap.

The Corrupt Judges.

All reforms that we can carry out in this City will be comparatively valueless if we cannot secure the most important and most urgently-needed reform of all—namely, the removal of the corrupt Judges from the Bench. If we could once obtain a proper administration of the law, many existing abuses could be corrected, even without the legislation now going on. But everybody knows that in some of the chief Courts of this City justice cannot possibly be had, except at a "price." Whether the charges against the Judges can be technically proved or not, no one doubts that they are more than warranted by the facts. The very names of the unjust Judges have become by-words all over the world. Cases of their oppression or dishonesty are as notorious as that TWEED and his confederates robbed this City. But the Judiciary Committee of the Legislature will be unable to recommend the impeachment of these men unless proper evidence is laid before them. Is this evidence being given, or is it being withheld?

We cannot tell—but we much fear that the persons who could and should prove the guilt of the corrupt Judges are standing aloof. The fear which is generally entertained of these Judges is a striking comment on the way they have twisted the law into a mere instrument of gratifying their personal revenges. How many lawyers have come to us with information and complaints about them during the last few years, begging our interference, and finding at all times ready access to our columns! They were only too ready to put us in the foreground of the fight. We were to take all the hard knocks—and we did take them. So long as we were willing to incur the responsibility, the lawyers praised us for it. We say again that we never shirked this responsibility. We made ourselves the mark for the vengeance of more than one of these Judges. Several years ago Judge BARNARD threatened from the Bench to indict us before the Grand Jury, and we challenged him to do it—but he thought better of it. He has assailed editors of this paper, dead and living, with the foulest and most cowardly slanders—slanders such as no man with a spark of honor in him could possibly have brought his lips to utter, for they involved the self-respect of women as well as of men. He has laid many traps for us—but somehow or other we have not fallen into them. Our attacks upon the corrupt Judges do not date from yesterday—they extend back over years. If anybody wants to write the history of these men, let him look over the files of the NEW-YORK TIMES.

Yet we are here today, and probably shall remain when these Judges have met with their deserts. A man lives his life—a paper outlasts many lives. Surely the lawyers and others who are afraid to come forward with their evidence might take courage from observing how little harm has happened to us. Moreover, they have really nothing to fear. They can never produce their evidence with so little risk as now. The Committee mean to do right—and if they only get the facts to go upon, we are fully convinced that the Judges will be impeached. No lawyer need fear losing his practice. No private citizen need be afraid that the Judges will be able to imprison or ruin him. It is now that we can get rid of these Judges. Is it not too bad that the necessary evidence should be withheld? Probably the apprehension is general that it would be no use going before the Committee, because that Committee will do nothing. We are sure this surmise is unfounded. And how can you tell it is of no use to attempt anything unless you try? It is always of use to do one's duty. That is a law which no unjust Judges can overthrow.

The Committee meet again today. We call upon the lawyers and citizens who have written to us during the past few years to go before them with their complaints. If they do not, we hope they will not come crying to us any more. If they will not help themselves now, we can never help them. Will they have the kindness to screw up their courage, and do their duty like men?

The New-Hampshire Campaign.

The reports from the New-Hampshire canvass continue to be encouraging to Republicans. Senator WILSON'S labors have had a most excellent effect, and with such speakers at work for the ensuing week as Hon. JAMES F. WILSON, of Iowa; Senator PATTERSON, Ex-Gov. HARRIMAN, Gen. A. F. STEVENS, Hon. G. W. SCOFIELD, of Pennsylvania; Hon. EUGENE HALE, of Maine; Col. MCKEE, of Kentucky, and District-Attorney CORNIE, who aided so effectively in ridding the State of South Carolina of its Kuklux, with others, there ought to be little or no doubt of the result on election-day. Moreover, the most encouraging feature is the fact that the wonderfully perfect organization of the State, its system of Republican town clubs, is thoroughly aroused, united, and at work. It was this invincible organization which carried the State every year from 1856 until 1871. The original Fremont Clubs have been renewed every year in every town and ward, and fifteen years of organization, reorganization, and victory by small but decisive majorities, attest the power of their organization. Only last year was there any apathy, disaffection, or division. But these are now happily removed, and the organizations are united, vigorous, and determined. About six weeks before every election, the Chairman of the State Committee calls upon each club for a report of the political complexion of the voters at the approaching election—Republican, Democratic, and doubtful. The returns are made with remarkable fullness—as a general thing no single town failing to report—from which the probable majority in the State is estimated with remarkable accuracy. This canvass now shows a majority equal to the average of years prior to 1871, and other indications confirm this.

The present campaign is essentially a national one in the character of the issues discussed. Local matters are almost ignored. The conduct of the Administration and the legislation of Congress are up for approval or disapproval, and both parties are straining every nerve to get a result that will aid in the Presidential campaign. The Republican Party has the advantage of being represented on the ground by much the ablest, best-informed, and most authoritative speakers. As its strength lies in the general excellence of its record, this fact is of great importance. The Democrats rely mainly on diversions affected by means of the Prohibitionist ticket, and on the speeches of the disaffected Republican Senators, particularly SUMNER, SCHURZ and TRUMBULL. How far these gentlemen can reconcile their course in thus giving aid and comfort to the Democracy, with their own honest views of the character of that party, we cannot say. We do not believe that their speeches will change many votes. They do not meet the facts with which the people are most familiar, and concerning which they feel most interest. Mr. SCHURZ'S insinuations that the President makes corrupt use of his appointing power do not weigh against the President's actual work in the establishment of Civil Service Reform. His attacks upon the conduct of the Treasury Department cannot wipe out the facts of improved public credit and reduced taxes. Mr. SUMNER'S unworthy attempt to break down the good faith of the Government in the German war, falls to the ground in face of the fact that the German Government has found no fault with the United States. Mr. TRUMBULL'S voluble protestations concerning reform have little force with people who see his coquetry with the Democracy, and read his name as candidate for the Presidency at the head of the column of anti-Republican papers.

But apart from all this, the people of New-Hampshire are asking themselves whether the time has come for surrendering the Government into the hands of the party notoriously hostile to the war and the results of the war. They know that the country is doing well, the debt decreasing, credit rising, taxes falling, trade reviving, industry extending. They are not tempted in behalf of material interests to introduce to the Government a party tainted with repudiation, and the parent of Tammany. And they are asking whether, if material interests would not benefit by the change, the South can yet be trusted to a Democratic Administration? They remember the freedmen, whom the nation is pledged to protect in their new rights, and the Kuklux Klan, which is organized to deprive them of those rights; and they question whether it is safer to trust the Democratic Party, which includes and apologizes for the Kuklux, or the Republican Party, which includes and will exhaust all legal means to protect the freedmen. Senators with "grievances" to resent, or with ambitious ends to serve, may forget the experience the nation has gone through, and the tremendous awakening of the national feeling resulting from it. But the people do not. All the pledges the close of the war left the nation bound by will be carried out, and New-Hampshire is not likely to be persuaded to trust the fulfillment of those pledges to the Democracy, or to the allies of the Democracy, under any circumstances.

A Word to the Assembly Judiciary and Railroad Committees.

On Tuesday next the Judiciary Committee of the Assembly will vote upon what is known as the Attorney-General's bill—the object of which is to modify the infamous provisions of the law passed by the Erie Ring in 1870 for their protection, and to remove the legal difficulties which have heretofore prevented the Erie stockholders from getting a sight of their own books, and calling their dishonest agents to an account. If any member of the Committee objects to this particular bill, let him propose a substitute which shall give the necessary relief. Let us have some equivalent bill, if not this.

There are some members of this Committee who are reputed to be the agents and tools of the Erie Railroad, and to them we have nothing to say today. Let them look to their patrons for their reward, and we shall do our best hereafter to give them their punishment. But to those members of the Committee who depend on the good opinions of their fellow-citizens for their future advancement, and who value the opinions of honest men, we have this to say: No vote against these anti-Erie measures, which shall be unaccompanied with some proposition of equal efficacy as a substitute, will be accepted as an honest vote.

The corrupt measures which GOULD and his associates are using to defeat this legislation are well known, and the eyes of every man who values honest dealing and the fair fame of this State are fixed upon the members of the Committee to see how far these corrupt influences are to be successful. The indignation of the people last Fall was not directed against the corruptions of this City alone, but was also strongly aroused by the frauds of the Erie managers. The people elected this Legislature to correct these abuses, and woe be unto the man who disappoints the popular longing. Let each member of this Committee ask himself what his chances of election would have been last Fall had he been known and denounced as a tool of the Erie Ring, and let him remember that no man can dare to come before the people at the next election whose record as to these great abuses, which the Republican Party is bound by its principles and professions to root out, is not clear and honorable.

The moral force of the people is not yet spent. A man who votes against these needed reforms without a good explanation of his vote, not only ruins himself, but is a traitor to his party, and deserves to be held up as such from one end of the State to the other. For it is certain that should the Republican Party fail to use its power for the purposes of purification, it will go down in this State with a dishonored name.

We are not complaining of the honest and conscientious vote of any man, but we do say, that no man can be honest who is not eager to put a stop to these Erie frauds and robberies, and no one will believe in the honesty of a man who professes to desire the relief, and who yet opposes the only bill which will give it, without suggesting or framing any substitute. What we have said applies also to the bill which is before the Railroad Committee of the Assembly, repealing the Erie Classification act and providing for a fair election of directors. The bill introduced by Mr. HUSTED, which simply repeals the Classification act, is of no possible efficacy, and, as is well known in Albany, is regarded by those who are interested in a fair election as disastrous to their interests, whether so intended or not. It is a bill in the interests of the Erie swindlers. Its passage will do them no harm, and will be used as an excuse by their creatures to avoid any further action. A simple repeal of the Classification act does not oust the present directors, and if Mr. HUSTED'S bill further provides for a new election, yet it is well known to every one that a new election, without stringent provisions of law to make it a fair one, would be a farce. Very large amounts of the stock of men who desire an honest administration of the road, stand on the books of the Company in the name of brokers and creatures of GOULD and his associates, through whom it was originally issued. These men, and not the true owners, vote on it under existing laws. When HEATH and RAPHAEL attempted to transfer sixty thousand shares into their own names it was stolen from them by means of one of Judge BARNARD'S receiverships, and it took two years, and cost twenty thousand dollars, to get it back. Other stockholders will not expose their stock to such danger, and it therefore remains in the names of GOULD'S friends. The bill before the Railroad Committee simply proposes to enable the stockholders to transfer their stock without danger of robbery, and to insure a fair election. The votes of those who Committee on these bills will be momentous, and we shall take care that no man shall betray the cause of honesty without being held up to the indignation of decent men.

Still Grant as Any Cost.

It is as well to get occasionally from the quicksands of false accusations in which the enemies of the Administration revel to the solid ground of fact. Such an opportunity is afforded by the recent prolonged debate in the Senate on the sale of arms to France.

The charges as drawn up by SCHURZ, presented by Mr. SUMNER, and eagerly echoed (without the least inquiry) by the Nation and Tribune, were substantially these: (1) That our Government was guilty of a breach of neutrality toward Germany in selling arms to France during the war of '70. (2) That—we had better quote Mr. SUMNER'S own words: "It appears from the official report of the Secretary of War that in the year 1870-71, the sale of ordnance stores reached the sum of $10,000,000, from which, according to the report, only a small sum was retained to meet the expenses of preparing other stores for sale; while the official report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the same year acknowledges the receipt of only $8,286,131 70, showing a difference of over $1,700,000."

The second charge was dwelt upon with the utmost delight by the papers which have fairly embarked on the "campaign of slander," and the Chicago Tribune immediately took up the wondrous tale and exaggerated it—saying that "millions" had been embezzled.

We call the public to witness that the time of the Senate has been occupied for weeks in listening to the outlandish invectives of SCHURZ, and the drivel of TIPTON, over these charges. The "Anti-Grant" papers have spoken of them as if they were proved. And yet, all this while, a single inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War, Gen. BELKNAP, would have sufficed to elicit the truth, and to blow SCHURZ'S mess of slanders into the air.

Listen again to Secretary BELKNAP'S evidence on the money part of the question:

"The amount realized from the sale of arms, &c., was $9,748,942; of this sum $9,409,286 60 had been deposited to the Treasury as per certificates on file; $120,000 was reported in the hands of depositors on the 20th June, 1871; the balance was expended for preparing stores for the sale, fitting them up, &c."

SCHURZ, the other day, called some man a "liar" in the Senate, and this was considered by his admirers to be a proof of true genius. Having insinuated, and caused others to insinuate, that "millions" were stolen on this arms affair, and the proof that he uttered a falsehood being perfectly indisputable, what are people to call him? Would it be very wicked to apply his own epithet to himself?

Secretary BELKNAP'S testimony is equally strong with reference to the alleged breach of neutrality. He shows conclusively that the charges concocted by SCHURZ were utterly without foundation. This being so, of course the New-York Tribune cries out—"We don't want this investigation to go any further. It is all cheating. You are a pack of swindlers. Yah!" In the same spirit the Mr. Pecksniff of the novel—not the real one—was always especially bitter on people to whom he had done some gross injury.

This "investigation" having led to such disastrous results for the investigators, the public are of course waiting with the greatest eagerness for SCHURZ'S next move. A man without a shred of conscience in his composition, and who does not know what principle in politics means, is not easily made ashamed of himself. SCHURZ has another mare's nest in his pocket, of that we may be very sure. He will get up, or perhaps get TIPTON to get up, and demand an investigation of an "enormous abuse" which he has just discovered, and by which the President and his friends will be proved to have pocketed "millions." If anybody objects to this move, the objector will be told that he is trying to cover up "thieves" because he is a thief himself—with many other compliments of the season. The "investigation" will go on—it will stop all public business—but it will give SCHURZ another opportunity of airing that wondrous eloquence which has already filled the world with admiration and astonishment. And this little game is to be continued all through the session. Is it too much to believe that the people, by this time, begin to "see through it," and are about sick of the whole performance?

The Bankrupt Insurance Companies.

In the dearth of information, from any authentic quarter hereabouts, respecting the condition of the numerous insurance companies made insolvent by the Chicago fire, it is satisfactory to obtain, by way of Chicago herself, something definite on the subject. Receivers appear to be a law unto themselves; they are independent of all supervision, and relieved of obligation to reveal any more than they choose to tell about the concerns upon whose débris they are administering at their own sweet will. But a flank movement on the part of their Western creditors has suddenly brought all these administrators to book, and given them the choice between losing their places or treating matters upon pure business principles.

At a meeting held in Chicago some two weeks ago, parties representing claims against every one of the insolvent New-York companies were in attendance, and, after listening to a report which showed that certain other creditors nearer home, (the claimants of return premiums,) were receiving a preference and getting their money in full, the meeting resolved to proceed against these companies, and, under the United States law, throw them into bankruptcy, and into the hands of assignees who would be compelled to make a pro rata division of the property in hand among all classes of creditors. A shrewd lawyer had interested himself in surveying the field, and it was upon his report—that it made a million dollars difference to Chicago creditors whether action of this sort was taken or not—that bankruptcy proceedings were authorized, and the lawyer referred to empowered to undertake them. The effect of such proceedings, whatever it might have been with regard to increasing or lessening the divisible assets of the bankrupt companies, would obviously have been the substitution of other persons for the receivers now in control of these assets. And, naturally, nobody discovered this sooner than the receivers themselves. When the Chicago lawyer, armed with the power to throw fifteen or sixteen insolvent companies into bankruptcy, came on to this City, he found the receivers in a very much more plastic state of mind than before. And, as soon as he began to carry out the instructions of his clients, there was a wonderful lowering of proud standards, and a general disposition to parley and discuss terms of surrender on the part of receivers who had conscientious scruples against being ousted. A few days' labor here enabled the lawyer to get things just where he wanted them, and he went back to Chicago, carrying in his pocket the specific agreements of most of these receivers that they would no longer prefer return-premium creditors at the expense of those creditors whose claims were based on policies insuring property destroyed by the fire. This was the price of their being left undisturbed in their lucrative offices; and they paid it promptly.

Has it occurred to these contracting receivers that they have agreed to do what the law of this State decrees shall not so be done? Under our laws, return premiums are a preferred claim, entitled to be paid in full, and this claim can be enforced by law. May it not be possible that some angered creditor of this class will assert himself at this juncture, and thus upset the arrangement?

Brown-Stone Sewer Nests.

There is something the reverse of reassuring in the recent report of Sanitary Inspector MORRIS to the Board of Health, respecting the effects of poisonous sewer-gases upon the health of persons exposed thereto. Of the fact that danger lurks in these gases hardly anyone can be supposed to be ignorant. But the point which should attract attention in the report is the statement that a very large number of our new and "palatial" brown-stone front dwellings, are actually little better than so many pest-houses, by reason of their defective sewerage, and their exposure to these malarious emanations. Dr. Morris mentions a brown-stone dwelling in West Forty-third-street, where a little child had recently died from spotted fever, after only a few hours' illness, and in the basement of which house were found two separate cess-pools, in connection with the main sewer, which were simply flues for the escape of sewer gases into the house. And in another house, of equally fine exterior, situated in East Forty-eighth street, was found a four-inch iron sewer pipe, having the main waste pipe of one and a half inches in diameter simply entering it, without closing the joint. Of course there was here no protective appliance against the entrance of sewer gases and their dispersion throughout the premises. In this house, also, a child of three years of age had just died after three weeks' illness. As in the other instance, spotted fever, instead of sewer-gas poison, is given as the cause of death. That the kind of fever spoken of is superinduced by this mephitic atmosphere from the sewers is quite certain, for the inspections made, of premises where spotted fever has raged, give all needed evidence of a close connection between the two.

How far such a condition of things may be characteristic of our rows of handsome new brown-stone houses can only be learned by means of a thorough investigation. And even where some other disease, less virulent and less fatal than spotted fever, has enjoyed a long run in certain localities, it is reasonably safe to charge its prevalence upon this same sewer difficulty. Hence, the handsomest house, however fashionable or high-priced the quarter, may have within it the seeds of disease and death. In fact, we can name houses in Fifth-avenue, and on costly corner lots, too, where intermittent fevers are indigenous and endemic, the cause being found in the circumstance that originally the ground beneath the house had been a standing pool, which, although filled in, had never been properly drained dry. As a consequence the very walls of the building were, to the extent of their capacity, just so many absorbents or channels for the continuous transfer of miasma from cellar to garret.

That which is alarmingly true of the dangerous condition of our better-class dwellings, is certainly no less true or alarming of thousands of our tenement-houses. The subject is becoming one of serious import to all our citizens. It will not answer to dismiss the matter from mind, as belonging rather to one's neighbors or to the poor tenantry of the tenement-houses around the corner. Murray Hill and Baxter-street, Madison-avenue and Mackerelville, for once, have a common interest in a single subject, and that a subject which involves the questions of health and life and death. It may not be amiss, therefore, if we quote a paragraph of Dr. MORRIS' report, which contains some timely advice, and which all our citizens may heed with profit:

"It becomes the interest of every person to look after these matters on his own premises, and not rely upon his own suggestion entirely in these matters. It requires the experience of a careful and reliable plumber to investigate and examine every pipe, joint, cess-pool and sewer connection, to see and remedy all defects. And where it is possible (and it should be made possible in every dwelling, even at the expense of dedicating some rooms for a time) the soil-pipe should be carried through the roof, affording an open, unobstructed outlet for all sewer-gases, above and beyond direct inhalation. Diffused in the atmosphere and largely diluted, these gases become innocuous; confined in close rooms and concentrated, they are poisonous in the highest degree.

The provision of a direct open sewer pipe extending above the roof of the house affords a free escape for sewer gases where this direction can take place without danger to health or life, and is the only time obvious another condition that frequently occurs in the following manner: Probably very many persons have observed in their dwellings that at certain times there is a very offensive odor, which usually occurs after a rain, the explanation of which is this: The issues from the soil is usually connected with the sewer pipe at its lowest point; whenever it rains this leader becomes filled with roof water, which, rushing downward through the soil-pipe, causes an exhaustion of all or several of the traps in the various house connections from the waste pipes of the water-closets, wash-basins, &c., and until these exhausted traps become again filled with water by an accidental usage, there is really no obstruction whatever to the escape of the sewer gases through them into the dwellings, and from the fact of an increased pressure upon the capacity of the sewer itself, these gases are forced unusually backward through these openings thus created into the various rooms of the house."

Telling the Truth Unawares.

Mr. HORACE GREELEY, candidate for the Presidency in the place of Gen. GRANT, (and recently a confederate of HANK SMITH, and a partner with TWEED and SANDS in the Tobacco Manufacturing Company,) would probably rather undergo any moderate torture than publish a word in the Tribune in favor of the President. He wants to "break" him—for is he not a rival? And therefore a stream of mud is turned on daily through the columns of the Tribune for the benefit of Gen. GRANT. The Washington correspondent of that paper is instructed to gather up all the lies he can, and considering that he is a stupid man and a bungling writer, he does his dirty work as well as could be expected.

But the other day the Tribune, by some misadventure, sent a man to Washington who was not only sane, but honest, while the regular hack in that city is neither. This gentleman wrote a letter to the Tribune, which by another accident got into the paper, and stands on permanent record against HORACE GREELEY'S own slanders. It is said that when Mr. GREELEY saw this letter in his paper he was seized with an attack of oaths which almost choked him, and which a mule-driver in the far West might envy. He is still much shaken and depressed, but is kept afloat by his intense hopes of gaining the nomination for the Presidency, so soon as he has polished off Gen. GRANT.

The letter which caused this injurious effect was as follows. Pray let the reader remember that it is an old and very sensible correspondent of the Tribune who thus bears evidence against the Tribune. Read every word of it—it is all good:

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—If there ever was a boys' debate, it is the one which has been for several days going on in the Senate. [This refers to the French arms discussion.]

The whole mêlée has grown out of the fact that Mr. SUMNER insists on a preamble to his resolutions of investigation of the sale of arms to the French agents, which preamble asserts a good deal more than the Administration men can stomach. THEY ARE WILLING TO INVESTIGATE, but they are not willing to plead guilty. It is to provoke debate to ask them to do it. Mr. MORTON has resisted and resented the assault with force and naturalness. He has debated the subject as a political question intended to damage the Administration, and introduced solely for that purpose. This is evidently the sincere opinion of Gov. MORTON, and he leaves the impression on his audiences that he is not far from right. Mr. SUMNER, no doubt, thought there was something that required looking into. But then he was prompted to his conclusions by his dislikes and his suspicions of the men in office. Mr. Schurz backed him, and has done a good share of the work thus far. But SCHURZ is a pronounced Anti-Administration man, and says he won't vote for Grant if he is nominated. He says he is pledged to reform, and talks as though he thought there was a reform party rising on the horizon. He is prepared to step into that car when it comes along. Meanwhile, he balances himself on the edge of the fence that divides the two great parties. It is a free zone, of narrow proportions, which he will widen if he can.

There is nothing new, and so far as I can see, nothing very threatening in the situation. No great party can be for a great length of time entirely harmonious. Many men get so near to the front that they think they are entitled to the lead, and make a good deal of complaint if it is not given to them. We have had lots of experience of this sort in our own political history, and the world has always been full of it. This is what is the matter now. Prominent men fall into quarrels, and long talks and idle debates are the consequence. It is a phase of politics partaking quite too much of the character of personal gossip and scandal to be at all agreeable to the immortal mind. It is the scum and rubbish of public life. The more sluggish the current, the more this rubbish accumulates. The overfeasting dissatisfactions that political life breeds are as natural as musketoes after a shower. The only remedy is to cultivate the virtues of self-denial and unselfishness. But these are not the virtues that most distinguish the pushing men who swarm in public life.

The average Republican who possesses his soul in patience, is unmoved by the present trials of the party. They are no more than ordinary past experience would lead him to expect. They are the squalls and head-winds of the voyage. When the clamor of the altercation is over, he expects the party will meet together and settle their differences by voting on them. The vote is the only precipitator. It gives color at once. It is only by voting that we can settle the personalities of politics. If a party is not resolute enough in its purposes to support candidates for places who are selected by the majority, it is no party, and the individuals of which it is composed will frustrate their own objects. But the Republican Party is believed still to be firm and vigorous, and to have well-defined and well-intentioned ends, that the great body of its members do not intend shall be sacrificed. They look forward, therefore, to the Philadelphia Convention as the authoritative exponent of its views, and, as a party necessity, they will undoubtedly abide by that expression. Nobody can dispute that the Republican Party is going to be fully represented there, and, we may conclude, fairly also. And it is almost equally clear that what is done there will be ratified at the polls.

We have received a check for $40 for the Children's Aid Society, together with the following note, for which we thank our correspondent:

Will you have the goodness to convey to the Children's Aid Society the inclosed check, with the expression of my wish that the avails be applied to the establishing of a boy and a girl in rural homes. This request—thus you will be the channel of my contribution to a charity which you have zealously advocated—is meant to be my individual acknowledgment of the debt that all your fellow-citizens owe you for your good and effective efforts to cleanse the Municipal service. NEW-YORK, Friday, March 1, 1872.

The statement is made by the London Observer that, in case of the repudiation of the Washington Treaty by Great Britain, no operation would be made by that country to the use of Canadian waters by American fishermen. This would indicate a desire on the part of the English to keep the United States, by liberal usage—for this right is one long contested—in good humor for a renewal of negotiations on the same subject. But would it not be far more practical to use the treaty save its legitimate effect, and to abide by the result of negotiations already had, than which none could even hope to be more conciliatory in terms or more sincerely conducted?

Some interesting sketches of Sunday among the poor will be found in our columns today. They afford glimpses of life not commonly known to the great mass of the public. The account of the floating church, and of the places of worship along the river side, will well repay perusal.

A very interesting conundrum might be made from the question, What is the difference between France, as a Republic, under THIERS, and France under the Empire? Whoever undertook to answer it by stating any important difference would have to ignore M. THIERS' more than Napoleonic hostility to a free Press. A President who cannot bear that the Press should have the privilege of discussing the Constitution which the Assembly is about to frame, is so near an absolute tyrant that the distinction can exist only in name.

A correspondent, who lately paid a visit to Harrisburg, Penn., gives a very doleful account of its sanitary condition. He says that there is authority for the statement that some ten thousand persons are now suffering from a disease which has its source in the waters of the Schuylkill. Upon the banks of this river, there are scores of factories and dye-houses, whose refuse mingles together and flows with the current into the houses of Harrisburg. Heretofore the water has been purified by mountain streams, but this year there has been a drouth, and the result is as stated. The symptoms of the disease produced in this shocking way are diarrhœa, cramps, and cold extremities; and its effects are alike on young and old. Philadelphia, it appears, suffers, to a certain extent, in a like manner. From the Schuylkill that city also draws its water supply. So far, however, the attention of the physicians in the latter city has not been called to the matter with the same degree of interest as at Harrisburg.

The Turkish Government, in the enjoyment of a fit of morality unprecedented in the annals of the Porte, has recently ordered all improper illustrated works to be confiscated, but has left the local authorities to decide what comes under this definition; whereupon some of these enlightened gentlemen have lost no time in confiscating school-books, with prints illustrative of natural history, disseminated by the American missionaries, and other works equally innocuous. That Turkey is making desperate efforts to improve there cannot be a doubt, but the fact that the Government has just borrowed of the Austro-Hungarian Bank, at the rate of thirteen per cent. and one per cent. commission, would seem to imply that the success of her efforts is regarded as doubtful in commercial quarters.

THE SEASON OF OPERA.

The series of operatic entertainments to compass the farewell performances of Miss CHRISTINE NILSSON in this country will be commenced at the Academy of Music this evening. To-night "Mignon" will be sung. M. THOMAS' successful composition will be interpreted, as hitherto, by Miss NILSSON and Mlle. DUVAL, and by MM. CAPOUL and JAMET, and Mr. LYALL. All these artists are to quit the country simultaneously with the leading performer, and the first representation of the present season may on that account be greeted with especial satisfaction, as offering an excellent opportunity of enjoying the fruit of their united talent and energies.

SATURDAY'S PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

The fourth Philharmonic concert of the present season was given at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening. A symphony in E minor by Mr. S. L. RITTER was the most conspicuous instrumental composition repeated, and Miss ANNA MEHLIG'S piano contribution was the most notable solo performance of the night. Mr. RITTER'S symphony in E minor is an exceedingly creditable specimen of symphonic writing. It is to be praised, in its four movements, for clearness, if not passing beauty or eloquence of ideas, and for the sustained fullness and smoothness of the treatment of the orchestra. We were not very favorably impressed by portions of the last movement, which is respectable melodramatic music, rather than a grand tone-picture of the scene hinted at by an explanatory bill. As an offset to this, the scherzo allegretto, by the felicity of the theme and the grace of the handling, is to be warmly admired, and may be pronounced deserving of recitation, detached, in any concert. We should be glad, indeed, of an early repetition of the whole score. The orchestra of the Philharmonic is never at its best when first dealing with important works. In respect of interpretation, Miss MEHLIG'S share of the labors of the entertainment were the most satisfying. More vigor would have been looked for in passages of SCHUMANN'S excessively difficult A minor concerto but for the knowledge that a long spell of acute suffering had made, for a moment, the lady's appearance problematical. In thoughtfulness and sympathy, and in delicacy and finesse of touch, Miss MEHLIG'S execution was perfection. The qualities of a magnificent Steinway, where of the tones, in brilliancy and lingering sweetness, coped successfully with that most potent of rivals of the piano, a full orchestra, could not have had an exposition more befitting their rank. The remaining incidents of the concert were two vocal efforts by Mr. REMMERTZ, and BEETHOVEN'S "Coriolanus Overture," and LISZT'S "Preludes" played by the band. We should like to say that Mr. REMMERTZ was equal to his tasks, on preparation for which he had evidently bestowed much time. In the case of the air from GLUCK'S "Iphigénie en Aulide" it was, however, impossible to accept the correct but colorless delivery secured by mechanical study, in place of the pathos and dignity with which a skilled artist would have given voice to that impressive piece; while in the aria from BOIELDIEU'S "Jean de Paris," it was clearly proven that the gentleman had erred in selecting a number which only a singer who has been trained in accordance with French methods ought to choose. Mr. REMMERTZ must also be mentioned against the sombre accent of his French and against the rolling of his r's. The overture and the symphonic poem were rendered capitally; "Les Préludes," a mosaic of all styles of instrumentation, was given with especial finish.

BRIEF MENTION.

Miss ANNA MEHLIG will commence on Wednesday a series of matinée piano-forte recitals at STEINWAY'S smaller hall. BEETHOVEN'S "Appassionata" sonata, SCHUMANN'S "Kindescenen," and HENSELT'S "Liebesfied" are prominent numbers of the programme.—A Dumreich-Prackner concert takes place at STEINWAY'S smaller hall this evening.

ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR TO-NIGHT.

Mrs. JOHN WOOD reappears, after many years' absence from the American stage, at Niblo's this evening. At Booth's, a change in the distribution of "Julius Cæsar" will introduce Mr. BOOTH as CASSIUS and Mr. CRESWICK as BRUTUS. At Wood's Museum, a new burlesque called "Dora" will be brought out. Elsewhere, the entertainments of last week will be repeated.

CAMPAIGN IN NEW-HAMPSHIRE

Large Republican Meeting in Concord on Saturday.

Address of Hon. James F. Wilson—Confidence of the State Committee as to the Final Result—Manly Utterances of the Party.

From Our Special Correspondent.

CONCORD, N. H., Saturday, March 2, 1872.

The canvass has become intensely exciting, and both parties are making every effort to secure a victory. A large Republican meeting was held to-night in this city, which was addressed by Hon. JAMES F. WILSON, of Iowa, and Hon. GEO. C. MCKEE, of Mississippi. The latter gentleman, who spoke first, claimed that Southern outlawry was the outgrowth of Democratic successes in the North, as there were, after every victory of that party, these fresh outbreaks of Kuklux savagery. In the interest of peace and good Government in the South, he asked that New-New-Hampshire crush Democracy. Mr. WILSON spoke two hours, saying it was the privilege of New-Hampshire to first stir the political waters in 1872, and that it was important that this stirring should be such as would enable the Republican Party to complete the great work in which it was engaged. He then went on to review the history of both parties, showing that the Republican Party had redeemed every pledge it ever made, while the Democrats had failed to make good any promise made to the people, except that to enforce the Fugitive Slave law. He read from the report of the Democratic minority Kuklux Committee, recently made to Congress, to show that the Democratic Party intended to overthrow all that the Republicans had done, and exhorted his hearers to sustain the party which had proved true to the people. There was, doubtless, he said, corruption in the Republican Party, and he did not defend it, but, on the contrary, heartily approved the policy of the party, which was to discover all corruption, and root it out. As to the charge that the present Administration was corrupt, nothing could be more false. GRANT, beginning with the Internal Revenue law, from which eighty millions had been cut out, had yet collected in his first year as much, within six millions, as JOHNSON had in his last year, and he claimed this fact showed that the public money had not been stolen. The steady reduction of taxation and of the debt was an additional proof of the same fact. Mr. WILSON was listened to with profound attention, and was frequently interrupted by hearty applause. E. Activity of the State Committee—Confidence in the Result—Careful Canvass of the State—The Temperance and Labor Reform Parties—The Party Creed—A Vigorous Campaign.

From Our Special Correspondent.

CONCORD, N. H., Sunday, March 3, 1872.

No where in the old Granite State are men so busy today, no where is there so much of confidence in the result of labors now in progress as in the rooms of the Republican State Committee, where scores of hearty volunteers are engaged in sending political truth to all the mountain tops, and into all the valleys that lie between. In that room a hard battle has been fought, and there are many entitled to share in the credit of the victory in which it promises at last to end; but foremost of them all is Hon. E. H. ROLLINS, Chairman of the State Committee, who has labored incessantly for weeks to make sure that Republican triumph which seems certain. There is good reason for the confidence with which the Republicans of New-Hampshire now await the trial of Tuesday week. It is true they went into the canvass with the State in the hands of their opponents; for it will be remembered that last year the vote for PIKE was 35,392, while that for WESTON, the Democratic candidate, was 34,700, with 1,137 scattering, which resulted in the end in the choice of Mr. WESTON for Governor. There was thus cast a total of 69,729 votes, leaving the Republican ticket in a minority of 1,943; and it is this vote which must be overcome to insure a triumph.

THE CANVASS OF THE STATE.

The careful canvass made by the Republican Committee shows conclusively that it will be overcome, and that on the general ticket the Republicans will have a clear majority of from 600 to 1,000. This canvassing of the popular vote prior to an election is something unknown, and perhaps impracticable in the politics of New-York City, but here it is an old established custom, and easy of accomplishment. There are few changes of residence, and the increase of the voting population being chiefly from young men reaching maturity, the thorough organization of the party permits it, through its appointed agent in each town and neighborhood, to make up lists at head-quarters of the names of all voters in each locality both for and against it. Those lists have already been made up this Spring, and give the State to the Republicans by about 1,500 majority; but competent judges admit the preponderance will be less than this, probably owing to the fact that since the canvass was made, there has been a slight increase in the temperance vote, which will be drawn exclusively from the Republicans. There are, it is well known, four general tickets before the people, being the Republican, Democratic, Temperance and Labor Reform; but the two latter are scarcely disturbing elements, as the first of them is credited with only about one thousand, and the other with half that number.

ESTIMATES OF THE VOTE.

The estimates put the total vote of the State on Tuesday week at 74,000, being an increase of about 4,000 over last year, which leaves 72,500 to be divided between the Democrats and Republicans. Unless all present signs prove to be false, the Republicans will get at least 36,600, but probably a little over 37,000. In that case, although the contest will be sufficiently close to make the counting of the ballots an interesting operation, there will be a sufficient indication of popular feeling to make the State sure in November for the Republican nominee for the Presidency.

THE SENATORSHIP.

And with this clear majority of the popular vote, there is the additional satisfaction that there is no longer any doubt that the Republicans will have the Legislature, and thus secure the United States Senator, which that body is to choose. There are several candidates for this position, among whom are Mr. ROLLINS and Gen. WALTER HARRIMAN, and it must be admitted that the friends of these and other gentlemen named for the place, have been somewhat premature in pressing their claims, and have thus awakened some local jealousies which should have been left in profound slumber until after the election. It is principally because of these jealousies that the Republican majority already promises to be less than it did a few days ago. But the general result is not in danger, nor is there any fear that anything will happen which will place it again in doubt.

NO DOUBTFUL ISSUES.

The present happy state of the canvass has not been reached by political jugglery, but, on the contrary, the utterances of the party have been from the outset, unmistakable. The Convention which put in nomination Hon. ESEKIEL A. STRAW, whom the Republicans will elect the next Governor of New-Hampshire, among other things, declared:

That the Democratic Party, in the course of its brief and accidental control of our State Government, by its wanton expenditure of the public money, and consequent increase of the State debt; by its greed for office and recklessly partisan legislation; by its complete subserviency to demagogues, and the appointment of incapable and incoherent men to office, has shown itself to be signally unworthy of the confidence and support of the people—and that, particularly, the course of the leaders of that party in attempting to gerrymander Senatorial districts and Ward lines, thus outraging the most sacred rights of the people, and in protracting the session of the Legislature for weeks after the public business was completed, for no other purpose than to secure the offices of the State for its adherents by a resort to bribery, fraud, intimidation, and revolution, has merited the rebuke and should receive the condemnation of every honest man in New-Hampshire. That President GRANT, by the wisdom, prudence, skill, honesty, capacity, and abundant success with which he has administered the affairs of the executive or Executive Bond, has fully justified the confidence reposed, in his integrity and ability as a statesman by the Republican Party, and richly merits a renomination and re-election at their hands; and we confidently propose him as the Republican standard-bearer in the State Central campaign of 1872.

Upon the issues here presented the campaign has been unflinchingly fought. There has been incessant arraignment of the Democracy for their shortcomings in State government, and unequivocal denunciation of their programme in national affairs. In State matters the excellent point has been made and repeatedly urged, that while Democratic management has been in the highest degree reprehensible, they have been unable to find a single fault in the fifteen years of Republican rule which preceded their present incidental possession for a single year. Although having unfettered access to all Governmental records, they have been unable to arraign the Republican Party for a single act of maladministration in all those fifteen years, and the argument tells with great effect among the honest yeomanry to whom it is made, that a party which left such records behind it is the one which the people should trust. In national affairs there has been equal emphasis in the indorsement of the Administration of President GRANT. The admirable speech of Senator WILSON, of Massachusetts, published in the TIMES, was the keynote of the contest, and its convincing facts are being presented by other speakers. Here there has been no stabbing of the Republican Party in the House of its friends, no urging of faults in the Government machinery, which President GRANT inherited from his predecessors as proofs of his corruption. The heresy of liberal Republicanism has not yet penetrated these mountain fastnesses, where the Republicans have sought in vain to find in what Senators SCHURZ and TRUMBULL and other preachers of the new gospel are more liberal than their fellows, except in denunciation of their party and its chosen servants.

A VIGOROUS CAMPAIGN.

The work of presenting this plain creed of the party to the people has been prosecuted with a vigor that has never been exceeded in New-Hampshire. When the work began the people were indifferent, and the first meetings were sparsely attended and lacking in enthusiasm. Now, however, the excitement is at fever heat, the meetings of the Republicans are all large and sympathetic, and volunteers in abundance are found to do all the drudgery of the campaign, without which it would end in failure. Vast quantities of pamphlets have been scattered over the State, meetings have been held in every town and hamlet, which have been addressed by distinguished speakers from abroad, as well as by the most popular and effective of the home orators. Of the former the most distinguished has been Senator WILSON, but there are others scarcely less powerful. Among these are Hon. G. W. SCOFIELD, of Pennsylvania; Hon. WM. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, Gen. JOHN L. SWIFT, Hon. GEO. A. MCKEE, of Mississippi, Gen. D. T. CORBIN, of South Carolina, and last, but by no means least, Hon. JAMES F. WILSON, of Iowa. The latter gentleman addressed a large meeting in Nashua last night, will speak at a mass-meeting in this city tonight, and on Monday will address the electors at Keene. The other gentlemen named, besides others both from within and without the State, will speak at different points during the coming week, which, as it is the last, promises to be the liveliest of the campaign. A novel feature of the week will be one or more addresses by Mrs. LIVERMORE, whose services have been offered to the State Committee and accepted, but Mr. ROLLINS has not yet arranged appointments for her. It will, however, be done today, and the notices sent out. The stories abroad that Secretaries BOUTWELL and ROBESON are to take a personal part in the contest are not confirmed at Republican head-quarters. There has been some talk that Secretary BOUTWELL should speak once at some point in the State, in order that the great financial work of the Administration might be authoritatively presented to the people, but since the admirable speech of Senator WILSON it is generally felt that there is no need of further argument on this point. Whatever may be ultimately concluded upon, I am authorized to state that at this date no arrangements have been made for the coming of Secretary BOUTWELL to address the people. E. C.

The Senate Crusade.

From the Boston Advertiser.

The report of the illness of Mr. SUMNER will nowhere cause greater regret than among his own constituents. During the last three weeks he has thrown all his strength into the discussion on the sale of arms to French agents. We print elsewhere his closing argument on the two main points to which he insisted upon being held, the first relating to international duty, the second to alleged malfeasance on the part of our officials. That he believed the Goverment had violated its neutral obligations, and that some officers in the confidence of the Administration had stolen large sums of money in consequence of it, is no doubt true. But those who read his speech will see on how faint a shadow his belief rested, and what drafts it must have made even on a strong man to sustain it. Mr. SUMNER has been so long on the winning side, and so in the habit of being justified by events, that in this case he has deceived himself both in respect to the nature of his charges and the value of his evidence. The whole subject is now in the hands of independent committees of the two Houses, where it should have gone at the outset, and whose judgment, it is to be presumed, will, if there is cause for blame, place it where it belongs.

Fortunately this wretched quarrel, grounded upon a sick man's fancies, will not be longer allowed to overshadow the vastly greater issues with which the country is confronted. The contest for the control of the Government in the future is already begun. There are two parties as well organized and as well defined as were ever brought together at the opening of a Presidential canvass. If the leaders of the Democratic Party have been less demonstrative than formerly, it is because they have found Republicans doing their work effectually. Why have the opposition Senators been silent during this long debate? Why was not the question contested on Mr. LYNCH's motion in the House? Why have the Democratic organs been satisfied with reprinting the scandal with which the Senate chamber has been flooded without calling at their own reserves? It is simply because Republican Senators, notoriously hostile to the Administration, seized the moment most fortunate for the opposition to make their assault, and carried it forward with a degree of energy which no Democrat could possibly approach. New-Hampshire is at this moment covered with garbled sketches of the speeches of Mr. SUMNER and Mr. SCHURZ—speeches made on a motion for inquiry, and, so far as they touched the integrity of the Government, refuted on the spot; yet wherever the frank of a Democratic Congressman, passive or aggressive, would be appreciated, these speeches have been forwarded by the ten thousand as the best materials at their command.

Meanwhile, the President, the Secretary of War, the head of the Bureau of Ordnance, and the subordinates through whom all this business must have been transacted, are silent. There is no national theatre gorgeously painted, crowded with admiring auditors from pit to dome, in the midst of which they may appear, to confound slanderers. They have defenders, but no representatives in the Senate to answer for them. Mr. Morton, Mr. Frelinghuysen, Mr. Harlan, Mr. Conkling, Mr. Sherman, and others, acting on their own responsibility, have ably and successfully repelled the assault; but the Executive Department, the Government, represented by the President and his Cabinet, has not made its appearance. It is not his power to do so; and it must trust for its vindication, not to the speeches of friendly Senators, not even to the reports of committees of either House, but to its public record, and to the common sense and the sense of justice of a fair-minded people.

A Rough Practical Joke with a Fatal Ending.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer, March 2.

At the corner of Seventh and Cullen streets, New Year's night, a party of colored men gathered. Most of them were under the influence of liquor, and behaved in a disorderly manner, and appeared to be ready for any practical joke. DAVID BUTLER, one of the party, rendered himself conspicuous by flourishing a revolver. While the party was thus congregated a colored man happened to pass on the other side of the street. Upon his head was a new dress hat. This attracted the attention of the party, and one of them drew a revolver and said: "Now, boys, see how nice I'll plug a hole in that hat." They told him to go ahead. He did so, and the unfortunate man dropped to the pavement, bleeding fearfully from a wound in the neck. As soon as the crowd saw the mischief which had been done they dispersed. The injured man, whose name was JOHN A. BROWN, was removed to the Pennsylvania Hospital, where he died from his wound Tuesday last. Yesterday morning DAVID BUTLER, who it is believed, fired the shot, went to the Central Station and gave himself into custody. He stated that he wanted to stand trial.

ASYLUMS FOR THE INEBRIATE.

What They are Doing at Binghamton—The Action of Times Sending Them Patients.

A century ago JOHN HOWARD was elected to the office of Sheriff, an office which, as he modestly remarks, "brought the distress of the prisoners more immediately under his notice." JOHN HOWARD inaugurated the great prison reform of the world's history, and we are now educated up to the knowledge and belief that a prisoner, though a criminal prisoner, is nevertheless a human being, and above all that his reformation is possible, if not probable, under kind and judicious treatment. "Is it scarcely more than seventy years," says Dr. WILLARD PARKER, "since, in this country, insanity began to be regarded as a disease, and provision began to be made for its treatment. * * * It is now known that from seventy to eighty per cent. of cases of acute mania, such as are placed under scientific treatment within a year or less from the time of attack, recover and are thus restored to their friends and to their place in the world."

Within the last fifteen years medical science has made another great, and important stride, and has declared inebriety to be a disease, but, happily, a decidedly curable disease, and treats it as such and cures it. It has arrived at this conclusion, first, by determining the true nature and character of alcohol; secondly, by determining its influences upon the animal economy of the human body; and thirdly, by proving, first by solitary experiment and afterward in the case of numbers, that the disease incubated and developed by alcoholic influence is eradicable when medical treatment is invoked to the aid of nature's recuperative powers. Impressed with this fact in medical science, its first believers advocated the establishment of asylums or hospitals for inebriate persons; and there are now ten in five different States of the Union. Inebriety be really a disease, it is a terrible fact to contemplate that, as is stated in the last report of the American Association for the Cure of Inebriates, "yellow fever is harmless compared with inebriety;" that "thirty-three and a third per cent. of all deaths in this City (New-York) were the direct or indirect result of the use of alcohol, and in the last thirty-eight years 190,000 persons in this City had died from its use, either by its direct influence or through neglect or disease of parents," themselves slaves to alcohol.

The important question then arises is it better to treat the disease of inebriety privately or in hospitals established for the purpose. The medical profession would seem to be a unit in favor of the hospital treatment, especially in State hospitals, or asylums, as they are called. The advantages of a State asylum are manifold—for instance, the State Asylum at Binghamton. It is protected by special Legislative enactment forbidding the sale of opium and liquor to its inmates; and a heavy penalty is visited on those who violate this enactment. This protection cannot be afforded to private asylums. Again, in such large institutions a variety of amusements, occupations, and literary recreations are easily provided at a small cost to the many. Direct supervision of the patients and control of their appetite for alcohol is also much more feasible in a collected body than would be the case with scattered individuals. Moreover, every patient in the asylum has a personal interest in the good government and order of an establishment which is to be his home for three or six months, as the case may be, and which may be a scene of health-restoring comfort to him, or an aggravation to his internal misery and self-acknowledged degradation. The appetite for alcohol, as a general thing, is not ministered to too publicly; and in an asylum, above all other places, a man would shrink from partaking of liquor, even could he procure it, for fear that his lâche would be discovered and resented by the officials or by the thoroughly well-intentioned among his fellow-patients. Thus, enforced abstinence gradually induces loss of appetite, till appetite itself is lost altogether in abstinence; and, in some cases, absolute distaste ensues. Here comes in the deterring influences of a real though unacknowledged detention. But asylums have another and important advantage over any attempt at home cure. In the social circle a confirmed inebriate is regarded as a very great sinner, if not as a criminal. He receives little sympathy from his immediate family—less from his acquaintances. His efforts at reformation meet with, at the best, a stern rather than with a sympathetic encouragement. Too often they are sneered at, and too often the unfortunate victim becomes restless under the microscopic scrutiny of those about him, and, from being restless, he becomes reckless. In an asylum the case is totally different. He is treated with the utmost consideration as a gentleman. With the exception of the officials, all are patients like himself, suffering from the same disease. He sees every day around him those who are already much benefited by the treatment. He sees that the disease is curable, and a gush of hope thrills through his own shattered frame, and he no longer considers himself lost beyond realism. The superintendents, the doctors, everyone with whom he is thrown in contact, do all in their power to foster and develop this impression. They associate with him and speak to him, not as a man under the ban of social degradation, but solely as a man suffering from a terrible disease, which it is their desire and within their power to cure.

The report of the State Asylum for Inebriates, at Binghamton, for the year 1871, has lately been issued, and it certainly offers very encouraging testimony in favor of the enlargement and multiplication of such institutions. When Dr. DODGE, the present Superintendent and physician of the Asylum, took charge of it, eighteen months ago, it was far from flourishing financially and had only 54 patients. During the last year 244 patients were admitted, 220 were discharged, and there are now 88 patients still in the Asylum; showing that an increased number of patients have been informed and are willing to take advantage of the benefits which it confers. But under Dr. DODGE's rule there has been a minor, but very important improvement in the management of the asylum. Whereas the total expenses for the year 1870 were $36,640 66, and the receipts from patients and other sources were only $32,594 22, showing a deficiency of $6,045 83 (from the 1st of June, 1870, to the 1st of January, 1871 the reduction in the current expenses of the asylum was at the rate of thirty-three per cent. of the expenses of the first five months of the year) for the year 1871. The total expenditure was $30,229 85, and the cash received from patients was $40,268 65, showing a surplus of income over expenditure of $9,039 62. This is the first year the asylum has been self-sustaining.

With regard to the success of the asylum as a curative establishment or reformatory, whichever it may be called, the report says that, of the 220 patients discharged during the year, 124 "were discharged with great hopes of a permanent reformation," and forty-six were "discharged unimproved." But in this latter class a large number were exhibiting patients committed for a period of three months by Magistrates. This is a most encouraging exhibit. Few hospitals, if any, can show a greater amount of success or a greater percentage of cases in which it may be hoped that a lasting benefit has been conferred.

The great drawback from which such institutions may suffer are the fears that their advantages, nay, even their existence, are not sufficiently known, and that men hesitate before entering them for fear of meeting with disagreeable fugitives from the people in the asylum, but from the world when they return once more to their old positions in society. This fear is, of course, a false sentiment; they it may be almost set down as a fitting of the disease of inebriety. No man, worthy to be called a man, would be ashamed to shun those the efforts at self-reformation of a fellow-creature. Each band of these drawbacks can be done away with; the one by earnestly and cordially recommending the asylum, as a temporary and respectability every man who has had the courage to voluntarily place himself under the restraining which is the normal principle of asylums for inebriates; the other, by every lover of temperance and of mankind, taking every possible opportunity of adjudging a man with an inebriable appetite to place himself at once in an asylum. Publicity will be wonderful. Two months ago, among the echoes of articles entitled "Our State Institutions," which have lately appeared and will from time to time appear in the New-York Times, there was one on the State Asylum for Inebriates at Binghamton. It was written by a correspondent who did not even know the name of the Superintendent when he visited the asylum, and was a thoroughly just and unbiased description of the institution as he saw it. Dr. DODGE says that several days after the paper appeared he (the Doctor) came to him asserting that they had been led to do so from reading that article. He tells one pitiful but pithy instance in the confection. He says that, late one evening, a gentleman came to the asylum in an advanced stage of intoxication. (this is almost invariably the case) when on being shown into his private office, asked him in nearly unintelligible tones:

"Do you run this place?"

"I am the Superintendent of this asylum, Sir."

The poor fellow, who could hardly stand erect, began to ramble in the pocket of his overcoat, and at last succeeded in drawing forth a much worn copy of the NEW-YORK TIMES containing this very article on the Binghamton Asylum. He held it up before Dr. DODGE and said:

"Can you do all for me that this man says you can?"

Dr. DODGE glanced at the paper, and recognizing the article, quickly replied: "I can, if you will help me, and will obey the rules of the asylum."

"Then register me for six months," hastily exclaimed the new-comer.

That poor fellow is now in the asylum, and bids fair to become a promising patient under Dr. DODGE's care. He had been on a "tear" for three weeks; but fortunately for him, in one of his more sober moments, he had accidentally lighted on this particular copy of the TIMES, and mid all his drunken orgies for days afterward, he had had sufficient unimpaired instinct to guard it carefully in the pocket of his overcoat.

A Few Plain Truths.

The following remarks, which we extract from a recent speech in the Senate by Senator CONKLING, are so full of truth and suggestiveness that we ask for them the careful attention of our readers. The speech was made during the discussion on SCHURZ's notable scheme to convict the Government of a breach of neutrality toward his native country, (Germany,) and to befoul Gen. GRANT's name once more with the charge of corruption:

My acquaintance with the people of the country may not be as extensive as that of the honorable Senator from Missouri; but the people I meet have, I think no such impression. They hear talk about a "military ring." They regard that talk as a part of the slang and scandal that defiles and brutalizes our politics. They read paragraphs in newspapers talking about a "military ring," and they dismiss them with other such, regarding these reeking publications as among the brutalities of progress.

But, Mr. President, I want to tell the Senator of an impression that does prevail. There is an impression with many people—it is coming, I am sorry to say, to be a fixed impression—that another ring exists—a "senatorial ring," or, more properly speaking, a "senatorial cabal." The impression is that the business of this senatorial cabal is not to furnish ammunition to the French, but to furnish ammunition to the American Public. It is believed that men flying the Republican flag are trying to strand the Republican ship. It is believed that the business of this cabal is to malign the President for the United States, to disparage and belittle him, to unsettle his administration, to vaunt for opportunities; ay, the language of the good book, "to lurk secretly" for opportunities to place him in an injurious and unfair position. It is believed that the business of this cabal is to assault and impugn the majority in Congress, and to injure those charged with the conduct of public affairs. It is believed that this cabal aids to get up and keep up that snow storm of libels, the great in volume to be measured, which falls daily on the country; that screamed shameless falsehoods, which, taking its rise in Washington, pours itself over the land through "independent" and avowed Democratic papers.

It is believed that persons connected with this cabal are inflicting wounds upon the Republican Party. Democrats have not the power to inflict wounds, which these men, if they pretend, could not make so deep if they would put on our Democratic armor and let it be seen. This impression waxes apace. It is strong, very strong, just now in the State of New-Hampshire. There is fresh reason for it in New-Hampshire. An election depends there, and the politicians say that whether the Republicans triumph shall stand or fall is of much importance for the light or shadow it will cast on the coming Presidential canvass. In the thick of the New-Hampshire contest shrewd Democratic politicians treasure like "apples of gold in pictures of silver" the words of members of this supposed Senatorial cabal; their speeches command attention with the New-Hampshire Democracy, which could not be gained by all the Democratic heroes and sages from Jefferson to my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAIR,] not even for the Brodhead letter. [Laughter.] That vivacious production is not so favorite now. It is not such a success, or, as the play-bills say, it has not such "a run" in New-Hampshire now, as another document, which lies before me. Here is a pamphlet consisting of twenty-four closely printed pages. It is entitled "Plain language of independent Republican Senators" "Blistering and pungency exposed;" "Speeches of several Senators; first of all, the honorable Senator from Missouri, [MR. SCHURZ.] This pamphlet bears the following imprimatur: "Published by the National Democratic Resident Committee, Washington, District of Columbia." These speeches appear without note or comment; no gilding the gold here; no painting the lily. Those who prepared the pamphlet thought they would let the speeches be as their makers made them, and stop where their makers stopped them, because they could not be improved as electioneering documents for the Democracy. I am told that two hundred thousand copies of this pamphlet have been sent free through the mails of the United States, franked by the Democratic members of the Legislature, into the State of New-Hampshire.

Such events and such a proceeding as now detains the Senate I tell the honorable Senator will not tend to dispel the impression that there does exist such a cabal. The proceeding before us wears an ugly look; the business of turning scourer of the Government, and charging a breach of neutrality touching Germany at this time has an ugly look. It is not giving information to the enemy in time of war, but there is a sort of family resemblance between the same things which will lead a great many people into serious thought. A great many people will think of it as the man thought of his horses when he said, "One looks so much like both, that I cannot tell the other from which." [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, I am able to assure the Senator, and I hope the Senator will give him pleasure, that the people in no portion of the country, as far as I can learn, are being misled by these proceedings. They understand the meaning of it all. In the State of New-York during the last fortnight many elections have been held; the Spring elections are progressing, East and West, and in spite of the Republicans hold their own, but elections result in unexpected and in some cases unexampled Republican gains. The people believe in the Administration, and the Republican Party as the party of progress and true reform.

The other day, in the city of Buffalo, a Democratic city, the Mayor came; a large representation of that sturdy, intelligent, upright people, the Germans of America, the Republican ticket was chosen by a majority of nearly 2,500; most of the wards giving Republican majorities. The same thing in less degree is true generally in the recent and current elections in the State of New-York.

No, Mr. President, the pretense that there is a "military ring" gives no disquiet to men who believe the cause of the Republican Party identical with the cause of the Republic; and with no right to speak for them, I venture to say that the Germans of the State of New-York and of the other States cannot be hoodwinked, or nose-led, or handed over, by any man, whoever he may be. The Germans had too much to do with preserving our nationality when it rocked in the throes of an earthquake to be willing so soon to hand the country over again to the party which once well-nigh ruined it. The Germans know that it was a Democratic Administration which prostrated our credit; which stripped our Northern arsenals of arms sent them to be ready for traitors in the South; which banished our navy to distant seas, and sought to bind the Government hand and foot that conspirators might murder it in its bed. The Germans know that a Democratic Administration did all this and more, and that the Democratic Party before, and during the war, and since the war, has been hostile to liberty, equality, law, public faith and national honor.

Burglary in Howard-Street—Four Thousand Dollars' Worth of Goods Stolen.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock on Saturday evening the store of BONGER, BACON & CO., on the second floor of No. 49 Howard-street, was visited by burglars, who succeeded in carrying off $4,000 worth of lace goods. It appears that the street door of the building is usually left open until a late hour in the evening for the accommodation of the parties occupying the upper floors of the premises, where a large number of girls are employed. The burglars entered by this door, and ascending to the second floor, forced off the lock on the door leading to the store of BONGER, BACON & CO., packed up the goods and walked off with them without molestation or discovery. One of the firm states that the goods could have been easily carried off in two valises. No clue to the thieves or the property has been obtained by the Police.

Scrapsie on his Travels.

From the Cleveland Leader, March 2.

A small boy picked up what is supposed to be an editor's pocket-book near the foot of Superior-street Hill, yesterday. It contained a receipt for making "scrapsie," a trip pass over the Erie Canal lying between Buffalo and Black Rock, and the names of two new subscribers to the Tonawanda Eagle, which accounts for the tour of tension travel the unhappy journalist was engaged in when a remorseless fate overtook him, and caused him to lose his entire fortune.

THE AFFAIRS OF GERMANY.

The Situation of Ultramontanism—Mr. Arnim—Prince Bismarck—A Statesman of Peace—The Ultramontanes and the School Bill—Remnants of the Government Party.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BERLIN, Sunday, Feb. 25, 1872.

The political events of the past week have brought out in bold relief the character and strength of the population opposing the present Prussian policy, and defined the reciprocal relations between the various parties more clearly than the occurrences of the whole previous time since the late war. Partly this result, and the broad line of demarcation which it has drawn, has been brought about, as a matter of course, in the lapse of time; partly this has been provoked, or accelerated, by the strong language of Prince BISMARCK, who has followed up his speech of eleven days ago by a more violent attack still, intended to carry the sword among his foes, and so personal that in any other country it would pass for highly unparliamentary.

CAUSE OF THE OUTBREAK.

The immediate cause of this outbreak of hostility was the dismissal of the Schools Inspection bill, a very mild measure otherwise, considering the object ascribed to it, and accepted by the ruling party merely as a poor installment on behalf of that great desideratum, strict separation of church and school, which means downright secularism, to which Prince BISMARCK is believed to be friendly disposed, though he does not deem it expedient openly to introduce it already. The Emperor's religious proclivities are probably the insuperable obstacles in his way. The bill simply provides that the school inspectors shall not henceforward be required to be clergymen, whereas this class have hitherto held the office as an ex-officio privilege of their livings, and both the Emperor and the new cultus Minister have pretty openly declared it to be intended as a weapon, not against the clergy as a whole, but individually against the Catholic clergy. Indeed, Dr. FALK affirmed that Protestant clergymen would hardly at all be affected by it. After the gauntlet officially flung down to the Catholic Church by Prince BISMARCK, such sayings as these are hardly apt to surprise. Still, the bill was opposed not only by Catholics, but by a large body, also, of Protestants, who value the traditional connection between Church and State; and the bill has been actually carried today by a majority of only twenty-six, viz., 197 against 171. That is in the Lower House; what the Upper House may still do with it is a matter of speculation; for in the First Chamber the pro-ecclesiastical elements are altogether in the ascendant.

SHIFTING OF PARTIES.

It is amusing to note that a shifting of parties has taken place in the last ten, nay, the last five years. Up to now it has been more or less concealed; a kind of surface discipline still kept the breaking organism together, but the cohesion has grown slighter and slighter as time progressed, so slight in fact that now instead of conducing to strength and unity, it only provokes additional irritation by the masses meeting in all. Prince BISMARCK began life as a Conservative, and by Conservative support gained his ends. What a Prussian Conservative, alias Junker means, I need hardly explain. To be a Conservative meant to be a servile follower of the King. An independent aristocracy, such as historically is that of England or the very old aristocracy of Russia, was not only unknown, but seemed an utter impossibility to Germans. So inseparable were the two Powers held to be, that when, some six or seven years ago, BISMARCK first made advances of political friendship to his now greatest admirer and staunchest supporter, M. LASKER, then a progressist, now a "National Liberal," the information was received with shouts of incredulous laughter. That was the first step of his secession. M. BISMARCK then found the Conservatives opposed to some pet measure of his; he was not used to go without his way, so he adopted the expedient of ruling one party by the other. This new party was easily formed. A little constitutional talk, some liberal professions, a few patriotic sentiments, the knack of yielding small things and taking large tones, were amply sufficient, for a man of BISMARCK's success can never want a party, if he has the least gift of management. Possibly the Prime Minister was sincere; he probably is sincere now in many of his constitutional aspirations. If so, it is believed by his friends, nay, asserted by himself, that conversion followed success and did not go before it. That he has still a strong autocratic vein in him his last speech undeniably proves. His first apostasy or emancipation for the Conservative Party doubtless was prompted less by principle than by policy. The new party, like all parties of success, comprises detachments from the two great sides, nominally upholding still the old discipline as "free" Conservatives and "national" Liberals, but at bottom they are one. The old Conservatives, formerly the profoundest worshipers of BISMARCK, were not unnaturally galled at finding him whom they considered their representative man, not to say their tool, aspiring to be their master, and a feeling of estrangement has been growing up between the two. Occasional skirmishes between party organs, such as BISMARCK's North German Gazette and the Conservative Cross Gazette, have indicated the state of things for some time, but an open rupture has taken place only during the present debate. What the upshot will be, it is not easy to say. The Emperor has very strong conservative leanings and conservatism cannot help remaining the pedestal on which the regal throne rests. If the breach leads rail to Parliamentary government and majority rule, Germany will have reason to congratulate itself.

OPPONENTS OF THE SCHOOL BILL.

The parties voting against the School bill were the Centre (Catholics,) the Poles, and the old Conservatives, numbering together nearly half the Chamber. The real heart of this tribal are the Catholics, against whom the measure is openly directed. The Poles have, naturally, Catholic tendencies, and the Conservatives have ever professed themselves warmly attached to Church ascendancy. Their most powerful motive for voting with the Ultramontanes, however, was probably that by yielding their support in this instance, they might reckon on a return another time, and motions on which the Conservatives and Government dissent, threaten to become frequent.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S ACTION.

Seeking, if possible, to stir up the various component elements into strife with one another, the Imperial Chancellor, day before yesterday, began by a long personal invective against M. WINDHORST, the Ultramontane leader, who happens to be one of those annexed in 1866, and Ex-Minister of dispossessed Hanover. M. WINDHORST is considered a Guelph, i. e., loyal to his old Prince, a matter not to be wondered at, and as long as he does nothing against the laws of his new country, perhaps no matter of reproach. M. BISMARCK would probably be as staunch a Hohenzollern, had Hanover annexed Prussia. Still the Prime Minister took his ex-colleague to account for the more sentiment.

"You have burdened yourselves with the elements of strife in accepting M. WINDHORST as leading member. That Deputy has become known to me as a staunch adherent of King GEORGE; he has left claimed to remain loyal to that King, and if he takes part in the present debate, his words are only intended to be the oil furnishing the flame of wrath with fuel."

This may be true; but as M. BISMARCK can make members accountable only for their acts and speeches, not for their thoughts, it is not quite fair. The Minister went on:

"I have shown that I can resist majorities when the welfare of the country demands it; and even today I would find it in me to so act, should M. WINDHORST obtain a majority; for I should believe that he had obtained it by unfair means."

This is very fine for a constitutional Minister. Having once more exhorted the Ultramontanes to "throw off the Guelph leadership," M. BISMARCK made a hit at the Poles, whose cause he promised it to be to establish anew the old independent Polish Kingdom, and who must not, therefore, be supported by German Deputies on any account. This part of the speech contains a characteristic passage:

"We shall make provisions for conferring on the Polish subjects of the German Empire (the very thing they are petitioning against) rights equal to those of Prince in Kissen as an example."

In a German Assembly, of course such a phrase was loudly applauded. Finally the Minister endeavored to discredit the Ultramontanes with the Conservatives.

RESULTS.

This splendid strategy, according to the maxim, "Divide et Impera," does not seem to have had the desired effect; it might possibly, had the spoken distributed his blows over so many different speeches; the clean juxtaposition has impaired their strength. After last week's speech the Ultramontanes, notified by the imputation that they did not fairly represent their constituents—a charge which should have been made when the elections were under scrutiny—formed a plan of throwing up their mandates thus to invite new elections. The project was abandoned, however, and deliberation on the party club.

Reckless Pistol Practice.

At about 11 o'clock last night a large pane of plate-glass, in the window of the drug store of H. SCHMETZ, No. 576 Third-avenue, was broken evidently by a bullet fired from a pistol by some unknown miscreant, who succeeding in making his escape. The damage to the window is estimated at $100, and is fully covered by insurance.

The Board of Health and the Glycodin Disinfectant.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, March 2, 1872.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

DEAR SIR:—An article, headed "Small-pox Disinfectant," appeared in your columns of the 19th inst., which contained some misrepresentations, respectfully claim, in justice, a reply in your columns.

The "Girondin Disinfectant" is a French discovery, and was approved and indorsed by the French Scientific Commission, and was universally used by the French Government during the late war. In the Spring of 1871, I offered to the New-York Board of Health the appointment of this fluid, and appealed to them to test its merits. In July following, I received an official invitation from the Sanitary Committee to present myself with a sufficient quantity of the "Girondin Disinfectant," at the Rendering Company's dock, at foot of Thirty-eighth-street and North River, on the 27th of July, for the purpose of making comparative tests of its merits and qualities.

On that day, comparative experiments and tests of the most severe character were made in the presence of the Sanitary Committee, City Sanitary Inspector, Chemist and Assistant Chemist of the Board of Health, the proprietors of the "Bromo-Chloralum," and the "Chloride of Alum," (each of them accompanied by his own chemist,) several well-known physicians, and, also, members of the Press.

On the 14th of August the Sanitary Committee made an elaborate report to the Board of Health of these comparative experiments, and recommended the adoption of the "Girondin Disinfectant" to the Board of Health, "in view of the desirable properties the Girondin fluid possesses as a disinfectant." The Health Department then ordered a small quantity of this fluid, and on Aug. 30, after a trial of thirty days, the City Sanitary Inspector reported to the Board of Health that "the Girondin Disinfectant proves by far the most effective, arresting and destroying the most offensive odors almost instantly."

In September, I received another order, and the whole quantity which I have sold to the Health Department amounts to $2,000, for which I have not yet been paid. Since the first appearance of the small-pox the Board of Health passed the remarkable resolution ordering the City Sanitary Inspector to make no further purchases of this fluid, alleging that the Board had no money, and the price was too great. The Board of Health then passed a still more remarkable resolution, taking an appropriation and "ordering their chemist to make experiments for the purpose of trying to produce a similar fluid equal in value to the Girondin Disinfectant, lately purchased, and at a less price."

This I considered as an attempt to infringe on the "Girondin patent," as well as an unprincipled action on the part of a public institution, through its officers, to force a patentee, instead of abiding by it, for it holds that the United States Patent law is for protection of the inventor, to secure him from being robbed of the fruits of his invention. I once quently informed the Assistant Chemist of the Board that any infringement of the "Girondin Patent" would be discovered, proceeded against by me, and defeated.

The allegation in your journal that the "Girondin fluid" is a secret preparation, is a gross misrepresentation.

Its composition was communicated to the Board of Health when I first applied to them.

Every chemist can have a copy of the specification, and can make the fluid; but if he manufactures it for any public

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

During the past week, ending with Saturday, March 2, the market has continued firm, and although no public sales of special import have been effected at the Exchange, the volume of business transacted has been quite large, the total value of City real estate disposed of at auction within the week amounting to $661,610, as against the sums of $651,175, the figures for the previous week ending with Saturday, Feb. 24. The general state of business is quite a satisfactory one to both owners of property and to the brokers, for but little difficulty is experienced in disposing of well-located realty at good bargains. The market will, without doubt, be benefitted by the important sales to be consummated during the next six days, and we hope to be able to chronicle the most successful results.

Midland Railroad

FIRST MORTGAGE 7 Per Cent. Gold Bonds,

LIMITED TO $20,000 PER MILE ON NEWBURGH ROAD.

The rapid progress toward completion of this great French Line from New-York to the West and to Canada, enables us to offer to investors at PAR AND INTEREST a further limited issue of these favorite securities.

Upward of 240 miles of this road, including the New-Jersey section, are already finished, equipped, and in operation; and contracts with responsible parties have been made for its entire completion by the first day of July next. When this shall have been accomplished its earnings cannot fail to be large and highly remunerative, as it has advantages at least equal to those of any of its competitors for both local and through business. It is building for cash, of which nearly $6,000,000 have been furnished by subscription to its stock at PAR. The work is substantial and, including equipment, has not exceeded in cost $60,000 per mile, which is less than one-third of the amount at which some of the trunk lines of roads leading from New-York are capitalized, and on which they are paying good dividends.

In view of these facts, the Midland First Mortgage Bonds must be regarded as a first-class security—quite as safe as Governments; and, by making the exchange at the present difference in price, holders of Midland Bonds will receive 33 per cent. more of revenue upon the amount invested than the holders of Government Bonds.

SUNDAY SCENES.

Whispers of Sabbath Life Among the Lowly.

A Ramble Through the Five Points—Worship Along the Docks—Bethel—A Morning Mass—Sunday Evening at the Bowery Theatre.

Yesterday proved to be fine and clear, after the boisterous snow-storm of the previous night. The sun rose brightly, and the snow quickly disappeared wherever its rays struck. The sunny sides of the streets were quite sloppy, while on the opposite pavements visible traces of the recent storm lingered. Though cold, the air was bracing and many people were abroad, giving the streets an animated and cheerful look. The churches were well attended, and traffic on the ferries rose above the average, while the several car-routes were crowded to an uncomfortable degree. Rambling about the City, our reporters visited several places of interest to the general observer, and their impressions of the scenes are presented, showing how the Sabbath is observed among the lowly in this great City.

ALONG THE NORTH RIVER FRONT.

The afternoon sun made West-street warm and comfortable, and as the pedestrian proceeded up the river side he passed at nearly every corner little groups of longshoremen, stokers on the ocean steamers, and other specimens of dock life. Smoking black cutty pipes and lolling in the sunshine, these men appeared to take their ease in a sedate manner, though they seemed to be at a loss what to do, so accustomed were they to constant and arduous occupation. The steamers were silent, and the great mass of river shipping which here finds a temporary resting place to discharge cargoes, were also deserted, though in their immediate neighborhood some of the crew lingered listlessly. On the wharves groups of women and children were frequently found, especially in the neighborhood of the ferry routes, and they had evidently all come from the tenements that are hidden here and there among the wholesale and bonded warehouses in the side streets. To these persons, the docks afford the only chance of obtaining fresh and pure air, and the day being pleasant, they were out in goodly numbers. At every ferry people were passing to and fro, as they came from or were going to Jersey City, Hoboken, Fort Lafayette, Commodore or Staten Island, and these localities were an air of bustle compared with the other piers. The silvery tones of the chimes in the steeple of Trinity Church sounded sweetly on the wintry air, and the church bells ever and anon called worshipers to prayer, though the summons passed unheeded by those found along the river front. The Hudson was flecked with masses of drifting ice, and the ferry-boats frequently struck them with a crashing sound, thereby giving the animation to the otherwise quiet picture. The comparative silence was striking, and the sudden cessation of mercantile life spoke forcibly of the Sabbath rest enjoyed.

THE CHURCH OF ST. BRIDGET.

On Avenue B, at the corner of Eighth-street, and facing the broad expanse of Tompkins-square, rises the large and handsome church consecrated to St. Bridget. From its central position in the heart of the poor quarter, and yet close to the handsome houses on Second-avenue, inhabited by those Knickerbocker families who are superior to the fashionable necessity of living in Fifth-avenue, this church administers religious consolation and instruction to congregations so numerous as to astonish the visitor. The early mass, at 7 o'clock, is the best occasion to see St. Bridget's in all its glory. Yesterday morning, some ten minutes before that hour, the writer stationed himself in front of the imposing façade, with its twin towers surmounted by elegant and lofty steeples. There were no stores open, even of those which in the poor quarters invariably carry on their ordinary traffic on the Sabbath. The sidewalks were covered with a crisp carpet of snow, and Tompkins-square presented a broad sheet of dazzling white, pure and unsullied. First by units, then by twos and threes, then in a serried column from every quarter the devotees poured into the Church through the two front entrances. They were seemingly all of the poorest classes. There were old apple-women in the very costumes in which they vend their wares, with their heads protected by woolen coverings of indescribable character. There were laboring men unkempt, unshaven, without collars, and apparently in their working habiliments. There were men who keep pea-nut stands and hot chestnut stands, and stands where the unctuous waffle is manufactured before the eager eyes of hungry purchasers. There were young servant girls in their ordinary attire, but with the smart hats that their feminine coquetry would not allow them to forego, even though they scarcely corresponded with the rest of the toilet. There were mechanics and mechanics' wives, professional nurses, proprietors of small stores. It would be difficult to divine the occupations of all the nondescript beings who hurried to St. Bridget's yesterday morning at that early hour. But the most peculiar thing about them all was that they were all in their ordinary clothes, and had put on nothing which could gratify their own self-love, or arouse the dormant envy of others. They were then, as they had been throughout the past week, and will be throughout many of mortals that crowded the aisles and overflowed the galleries, some persons, the delicacy of whose toilets could not conceal their gentle breeding. Yet they were as the others, and took the nearest seat that was unoccupied, making no pretension to better treatment, and mingling with the others, as if they were all indeed of one common stock, children of one great family.

The writer supposed that these thousands had been drawn together to listen to the pleadings of some eloquent priest who would wrestle with the powers of darkness in tones of impassioned oratory, and would entreat his hearers to virtue with an ardor that could not fail of success. But this was not the case. Inside, the superbly decorated altar was lit by a few candles, and two candelabra, while in the body of the church the growing daylight struggled through the gloom of the painted windows. A priest, served by two young acolytes, performed the offices of the church. The splendid organ was dumb, and from its left no exquisite voices were raised in songs of praise. There was nothing but the muttered service of the solitary priest. But after the ringing bell had tinkled thrice the acolytes covered the railings around the altar with white cloths, and the multitude went up to kneel around, and to take the consecrated wafer which the Catholic Church gives as a symbol of the Lord's Supper. Almost every individual among the thousands responded to the invitation, and took his turn at the railings. Then came a few more muttered prayers, a brief but fervent benediction, and the vast congregation poured out of St. Bridget's, and departed homeward as rapidly as they had come.

THROUGH THE FIVE POINTS.

A stroll through that part of the City most familiarly known by the name of the Five Points on Sunday morning will well repay an attentive observer. It is true the Five Points of today is not that of fifteen, or even ten years ago; still it presents many features of interest. The famous or rather infamous Baxter-street is an open resort during the hours usually devoted to religion, and yesterday, while the bells of the neighboring churches were sounding the call to worship, many a loitering man could be seen haggling with a store-keeper about the price of a pair of new-footed boots, or a second-hand but refurbished coat.

The first thing that attracted the attention of the Times reporter yesterday was a family moving their household goods to some new residence. The man evidently thought he could not afford to lose a day's work to effect a removal, and had borrowed from acquaintances a wagon in which he placed his furniture, and finally with the assistance of his wife, a full-sized young child and with the use of a horse by dragging the vehicle to its destination.

Another peculiar feature of this vicinity yesterday morning was the total extinction of liquor. At every corner in a liquor-store, apparently closed, but the frequent passing to and fro of men though an adjacent hall-way, and the suspicious egress of women with their hands concealed under their aprons proved that the Excise law is but a dead letter. In the less frequented but more densely inhabited streets, the side hall-doors leading into "distilleries" are not even closed, and the observer can plainly witness the open traffic in deleterious compounds.

But little respect to the Sabbath is paid by the youth and half-grown men of this region. At the corners of the streets, especially in the vicinity of disreputable groggeries, could be seen groups of this character, amusing themselves with smoking the butt of a cheap cigar, or dancing the "double-shuffle" on the sidewalk. On the open space formed by the cutting through of Worth-street, a group were indulging in a game of base-ball, the ball often passing close to the face of some servant girl, who, book in hand, was wending her way from one of the narrow streets to a neighboring church. In Park-street, immediately under the shadow of the cross on the church in Mott-street, a long line of boys and youths had made a slide on the gutter, and while the bells were ringing for service, the sound was often drowned by their boisterous mirth. Not very far from this spot a number of boys were pitching pennies, while a scout was kept on the lookout to see that they were not interrupted by the officer who was apparently busily engaged in some discussion with the man at the oyster-stand near by.

The streets in this neighborhood are in a filthy condition, and the goats kept by stablemen appeared to have full liberty to root among the garbage in the ash-boxes. The large number of ash-carts, as they stood in a row, turned up on end, with the shafts in the air, was remarkable, and they almost blocked up the thoroughfare, both roadway and sidewalk. "The fellers here," answered one of the residents to an inquiry, "don't mind the carts, as they are so used to them, and they work their way through them somehow."

The Italian region of Mulberry-street presented a lively, but depraved appearance. Numbers could be seen clustered round a cake or nut stand, going through some little game, in the hope of getting an extra supply for their money—the rest laughing loudly in the event of failure. Those not engaged in this way were smoking, or talking in a boisterous manner—their foreign language attracting the more attention.

Notwithstanding the efforts made by the different Missions to induce poor persons to attend religious worship at the Mission-houses, the seats, yesterday morning, were nearly empty, and the ministers addressed the few present with almost a disheartened tone of voice. "It is a hard field to work in," said one of the officials, "but we believe that some good has been done, and more may yet be accomplished."

RED BENTLINES ON TEMPERANCE.

A temperance lecture was delivered last evening, at the Bowery Theatre, by Col. E. Z. C. JUDSON, ("Ned Buntline.") Long before the lecturer appeared the galleries were filled with the same class that generally occupy these benches on play nights, but a number of the seats in the balconies and reserved seats held respectable people. As soon as Col. JUDSON came on the stage he was greeted with a torrent of applause, but it was of that peculiar kind only known at the Bowery. The exercises were opened by the Williamsburg Glee Club singing the old trio, "A boat, a boat unto the ferry," which literally brought down the house, when, in response to a loud and prolonged call, they reappeared and enthusiastically chanted the round, "Three Blind Mice," which was rapturously received, when the musicians retired. The audience was kept in suspense for a few minutes, but soon one of the side scenes of the stage was moved, and a poor woman meanly clad, with an infant clasped tightly to her breast, and three little children looking more wretched if possible than their mother, to whose dress they clung slowly, crossed the stage. This proceeding was a mystery to the denizens of the gallery, who hailed her with cheers and counter-groans, but as the lecturer stepped out, immediately afterward, and began his lecture, there was no time for any further demonstration. After reviewing the records of crime in this City, all of which, he said, were the consequence of intemperance, which reaches from the Baxter-street and Five Points slums to the stately mansions and gaudy club-houses, he said this curse is continually on the increase, and to remedy it, it is useless to be sorry without attempting to do something to remedy it. Local prohibition must be established, despite the cry of "our rights as American citizens," so frequently alluded to by the dram-shop dealers. These "rights" actually amount to barbering murderers, filling our prisons, making wives and children desolate; yet these men are supported by the populace—yes, and sent as the representatives of the people to the City Council Chamber. The lecturer then, in a strong and earnest manner, condemned the law which allows the saloon-keepers to have their doors open both day and night.

WORSHIP ALONG THE WHARVES.

Outside hung a piece of blue bunting, with "Sailors Bethel" in large white letters, and near it was another flag of white canvas, with this inscription:

Religious service for sailors
Every Sunday at 11 A. M. and 3 P. M.
Seats free. Books Distributed.

The modest place of worship without sounding chimes, tall steeple or stained windows, seemed to appeal directly to that numerous class, whose spiritual food the earnest Christian is so solicitous about. That large floating population forming the crews of ships, can find here the place and opportunity to worship their maker. Perhaps the sailor on Saturday night last, while his craft was laboring through the surging seas, the wail of the bitter wind sounding in his ears, as he peered into the horizon looking for the harbor lights, thought of his Sunday and wondered whether he would live to see this quiet house of God once more. No matter whether his hand were rough or his coat frosted with the sea-rime, there was a place, where he might go unobserved, and there thank God for safety after so much peril.

Instead of sounding organ from the balcony, for the place of service was in the second story, a hymn of praise was heard. Some two or three voices joined in a psalm, and they were calling the passers-by to join them in prayer. It might have been very primitive, the humble choir; very possibly they would have been out of place behind a gothic screen and gorgeous music-stands; yet their music sounded very sweetly along the quiet wharves yesterday, Sunday, morning.

The room was small, evidently, on week days, devoted to Commercial purposes. There hung a chart on one, and away off in one corner, the model of a ship, the original of which might have sailed away many a year ago. Perhaps, by crowding, the room would have held 100 people. The dress and appearance of the occupants bespoke their calling. Some were neatly clad, and had anchors for breastpins; many were sea-rings; no one was Knoll dressed. The weather of this coast might have bought it at Liverpool or Hong Kong three voyages ago. That burly man with the patched pea-jacket and rough locks perhaps never wore in his life better clothes, and felt no blame from the broad stream of tar which told of work board ship. Very quiet and orderly were they all. They listened with attention, and replied devoutly to the responses. As you entered, the name of one of the officers of the Mission was pronounced you, and a similar group was exchanged. You were made to feel at home, and to understand that a Christian welcome was offered you. A neatly-printed pamphlet, entitled Worship for Seamen of the Docks, was presented to each comer, and with it a journal, entitled Home and Abroad, published by the Episcopal Church, containing several spirited extracts, and in 16 pages which added interesting accounts of travel by missionaries in distant climes. Mr. J. COLGATE, Jr., who presided, read the portion assigned for his Sunday, and hymns were sung, which the congregation followed from the books. The sermon was from the 27th chapter of John—"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." No high-flown language was used. No subtle discriminations of creed were attempted. The speaker spoke of God and His mercy, and of His forgiveness; of the eternal life to be gained through the steadfast adherence to His word; that the Bible was the Almighty's legacy; that it is were riches more lasting than all worldly goods; that Christ did not care for man's apparel. That to Him fine linen and purple were as the beggar's rags. It was man's actions he sought for, and cared nothing for his outer shell. The voyage of man in this world was no easy task. Two pilots often tried to guide him. One would tell him, "Sail your ship just as you please; there are no reefs, no rocks, where you may strike and founder." The other said, "Beware, lest you be shipwrecked not only for this life, but for eternity. You cannot let your vessel sail as you will. That smooth-looking Summer's sea had just below it urnet rocks—but touch there and I can hardly save you." This was the voice of God, the other was the cry of the evil one. The exhortation was simple and straightforward, and admirably fitted to the comprehension of his eager listeners. The service was a short one. In one hour it was over.

The work of this Mission, from its particular location in Counties-slip, is a peculiarly useful one, and its field of labor very large. In Summer its proximity to the canal boatmen brings to it hundreds of worshipers. Service is then held on one of the barges. Perhaps in time a larger room might be useful. In the afternoon a somewhat similar service is held, when Bibles and Testaments in all languages, with instructive books, like the Pilgrim's Progress, are given to all who ask for them.

A FLOATING CHURCH.

Some years ago society awoke to the conclusion that, of all neglected beings, the bold mariners of our fleets were about the worst. They had no hospitals, no churches, and they had no homes. When society discovered this it passed laws for their protection, and it commissioned missionaries to invite them to come to church. The seamen listened respectfully, and did not come. At length some one hit upon a plan for having floating churches, Bethels—houses of God—down among the ships and right in the sailors' neighborhood. This proved more successful than any other, and though the attendance of sailors in these floating churches has never been very large, it has still been gradually increasing. Yesterday a reporter of the TIMES visited the Bethel in the East River, at the foot of the open square of Pike-slip. The place was encumbered with wagons of every description, and huge oak logs sprawled upon the ground. Gangs of very noisy boys were playing games in and around the vehicles, and used much profane language.

Among the shipping floated a neat little wooden church, evidently constructed on the most approved early English principles. It was protected by a high railing in front, probably against the incursions of the juvenile Philistines playing in Pike-slip. The gate of the railing was open, and a board stated that the church was free for seamen and others, and that Divine services were scheduled at 10½ A. M. and 3½ P. M. Entering with a couple of sailors who were gold ear-rings, and had matted hair that looked like oakum, the reporter took his seat and surveyed the church and the congregation. The building had a very pleasant appearance. The side windows were partially of stained glass, and behind the altar a large one contained two compartments, one portraying Christ stilling the storm, the other His healing the sick. Over the modest altar, which was set with a fair white cloth in token that the communion was to be administered, was the legend in gold letters taken from the Acts, "Thou shalt be saved, thy house." Yes, and not be saved." In front of the chancel was a tiny white-marble font, presented by the Church of St. Paul's, in the Bowery, and a carved-oak pulpit on a small scale. Facing the chancel was a little organ-loft, with an organ, and a choir of three voices—a gentleman and two ladies. The floor was handsomely matted, and the pews were comfortable, and all furnished with well-printed, well-bound books of common prayer. The congregation numbered about sixty, out of whom perhaps twenty-five were sailors. There may have been more men belonging to the sea, but these were unmistakably so—some with German or Scandinavian faces, and wore earrings; others, either American or English, were without that eccentric jewelry, but all had very thick, heavy overcoats, and their locks were in every case innocent of either brush or comb. One or two of them were really handsome, one strikingly so, and their dishevelled appearance gave them a "Viking" sort of look. Enormous hands, with the joints "forcibly accentuated," were the rule, gotten up for very rough weather. They were very reverently and quiet, only one nudged another in order to call his attention to the ship in the stained window, which, it must be confessed, was not undeserved. The artist had depicted some nine people in a space that would have been a tight fit for three, and half of them were standing up in a way that would certainly have upset the craft. It was this that roused the singer of the anchor, and he remarked that the artist was a lubber. His comrade's answer was out short b, the arrival of some ladies, who took their seats in a neighboring pew. Soon the service began, and was joined in heartily by the seamen present, many of whom read the responses in a deliberate, audible voice. One mariner was rather slow, not, indeed finishing for half a minute after the others had concluded, which, in the Psalms, was a trifle awkward, but the minister was very considerate and waited for him. In the hymns the tars joined most emphatically, especially the slow one, whose voice growled splendidly in the bass, but who was tempted to lengthen out long syllables to that reader, and bled the cast wild sighing through the sheave-holes. In this effort he broke down, which made him glance around guiltily, but seeing no one observing him, he took courage and recommenced. As there was no communion there was no sermon, but the minister made a powerful address to the sailors to partake of the sacrament. He recounted the events of the Last Supper of our Lord, and the invitation which he had given to his followers. He proved argumentatively the necessity of the act, and gave a little anecdote which had come within his own experience, of its efficacy in bringing peace to a wounded soul. A dying Swedish sailor in the hospital at Brooklyn had been brought to a sense of his sins, but was so overwhelmed with the realization that he could not believe in any pardon for him. He had been persuaded to accept the sacrament, and had hardly received it when God spoke to his heart and told him of his pardon; shouting out "Christ is my Savior—I know that my Redeemer liveth," he fell back dead on the pillow, with a face radiant with more than mortal happiness. During the process of this address the sailors listened with all their ears. Some swayed their bodies backward and forward in the agony of attention, and one, the strikingly handsome one with the "Viking" look, bent forward in his earnestness, with his right fist uplifted, and, as the anecdote was concluded, brought it down into the open palm of his left, with a ponderous thud of conviction that would nearly have felled an ox. The minister's face shone with satisfaction, and he evidently counted upon a numerous attendance at the altar. He recited the concluding prayers with a thrill of happiness in his voice, and pronounced the benediction before the commencement of the communion service in a glow of anticipation. But no sooner had he ended than those sailors got up, fumbled for their hats, and insensible as stone to his entreating looks, vanished outside. The reporter followed them, and said to the handsome one, "Will you not take the sacrament; you seemed interested in the story of that poor dying Swede." He replied, "If I was dying I'd take it too, and be glad of the chance, but tain't right according to my notion, unless I was pretty sure to slip my cable in this world."

Rev. Geo. H. Hepworth at Steinway Hall—The Atoning Power of Christ.

Rev. Mr. HEPWORTH preached to a large audience at Steinway Hall, yesterday, from the text, "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the World." The doctrine of the atonement lies at the foundation of the Christian religion. Without it, Christianity must take its place beside the other religions of mankind; but with this distinguishing peculiarity it stands alone a perfect monument of God's grace, His love, and His forgiveness toward an erring world. The Moorish, the Bramin said, "Beautifully symbolized in the Paschal Lamb sacrificed for the Israelites, the blood of which was to be sprinkled on the lintel, that the angel of death might pass by that house. John the Baptist, with the memory of the past before him, looking up saw Jesus approaching. To the Hebrews, Jesus was but a man, but the Baptist in rapture exclaimed, "Behold the Lamb of God," and announced Him to the world as He that taketh away the sins of it. There is but one way for man to escape the burden of sin—come to the Great Physician, come to Him and be healed and relieved. Come all and throw yourself at the feet of the Christ, and He will lead you to the haven of rest.

After the sermon a large number present partook of the Lord's Supper, the first time Mr. HEPWORTH has officiated since he left the Church of the Messiah.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

The Miller Investigation—The Life Insurance Companies—Cheaper Gas.

The Miller investigation was resumed on Saturday by the Legislative Committee, Mr. TOMEY presiding. Mr. DARIUS R. WARNER, President of the National Trust Company, said he knew nothing of any check being drawn in blank by the Commonwealth Fire Insurance Company on the National Trust Company, and that he had never paid any checks drawn by the Company. THEODORE R. WETMORE, Vice-President of the Security Life Insurance Company, said a subscription list to promote the passage of the Miller Life bill had been presented to him by Mr. LAWRENCE, last Spring; the sum required was $20,000; his Company was asked for $1,500, and this he paid; other companies were down for amounts ranging from $5,000 to $2,000. The impression prevailed that the companies were in favor of the bill, and had paid the amounts they were put down for; since then he had thought he had been imposed on, and that the other companies had paid nothing; he knew nothing of the way the money was to be used. JAMES F. E. HARVEY, Secretary of the Amicable Mutual Life Insurance Company, testified that the affairs of the Company were examined under the direction of Mr. MILLER in March last; the investigation occupied two or three days, and $200 was paid for it; it was not made at the request of the Company; $150 had been paid on account of issuance of stock to Mr. MILLER; no bill had been presented; a letter had been received from the Insurance Department for the first $200, but not for the other.

HENRY E. SHAFF, clerk for the receiver of the Commonwealth Fire Insurance Company, had heard of the report about a $1,000 check having been issued in blank, but had not found the check. He produced the stub check-book, showing that a check had been drawn on the Continental National Bank, under date of Nov. 11, 1870, for $1,000; but that erasures had been made on that part of the stub which should contain the name of the payee, and the purpose for which the check was given. The check should be in the hands of the receiver, but he did not think they were all there; he had read Mr. DOUGHTY's testimony, and there was a discrepancy between his testimony and the books; there were twelve or fifteen checks in existence for which there were no corresponding entries, making a difference of $11,000 or $12,000; he had found checks, drawn for losses, raised from their original amounts; a check for $154 was raised to $1,154; these checks were in the possession of the receiver. JOHN FOWLER, Jr., attorney and counsel to the Commonwealth Fire Insurance Company, said he knew nothing of the $1,000 check; without reference to his books he could not tell whether he had received $1,650 from the Company on Nov. 22, 1870; had paid no one to influence the examination of the Company's affairs, and had had nothing to do with Mr. MILLER in the matter. The examination was adjourned until this morning at 10½ o'clock.

The Castle Garden Abuses—Testimony of Commissioners—The Rent and Shoe Swindle.

The Subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Commerce and Navigation, Messrs. BENNETT, JUDD, GEIG and CAMPBELL, resumed their inquiries into the affairs of the Commissioners of Emigration at 10 A. M., yesterday, at Castle Garden, with Mr. BENNETT in the Chair.

GEORGE F. DALY, a store-keeper and United States Detective Officer at Castle Garden, testified that in 1866 emigrants were charged ten cents for a loaf of bread weighing three ounces less than what it ought to have weighed; it was a common case for them to be induced to sell their gold at 95 when the quoted price in town was 105; he had reported this to Mr. CASSIDY, but he would never heed complaints; without renewing nothing of the abuses that now exist in the Emigration Bureau; if the institution is conducted now as it was five years ago, there is no department of it that is not rotten.

Mr. WM. R. BARR, an agent of the Erie Railroad, and a member of the Emigrant Commission, said that the railroads are in competition for the transportation of emigrants; the charges are all alike. Erie allows a commission of ten per cent. to the brokers of passengers, to the steam-ship companies and to agents. The emigrant buys the ticket himself, is not allowed the ten per cent. The other railroads allow the same percentage.

Mr. WILLY WALLACH, a member of the Board of Emigration, was satisfied with the treatment emigrants receive; he was under the impression that there were too many officials in Castle Garden; in his opinion the disposal of tickets should be left with the Commissioners; the constant competition between the agents of the three lines caused the chief abuses to which the emigrants are subjected; there were many removals from office during the first six months of his holding the position of Commissioner, and the new officers were principally appointed by Mr. FREAR; the bills of the New-York Printing Company were very extravagant; a paid Commission would be of greater benefit to the emigrants; a paid Commissioner of five ought to receive a salary of $10,000 per year each.

Mr. HODGES, a shoe-maker, testified that he sold boots and shoes to KING for the Commissioners, and that on all these transactions KING made from twenty-five to thirty-five per cent. Mr. JOHN S. WILLIAMS, of the Williams & Guion line, said he paid the City $1 50 a head for passengers; this money used to be $2 50. A lawyer named NOLAN, engineered a bill through the Legislature to get it reduced on the plea that the fares would be reduced, but they had not been. NOLAN got twenty-five per cent. from the steam-ship companies on the amount saved by the reduction. Mr. LEONARD R. WELLS, the Warden of Ward's Island, testified that when Mr. KING was purchaser, he observed that the price of articles increased and the quality of goods and shoes was very inferior; Mr. THOMAS CASADY, a livery-stable keeper, said he had a contract to remove the emigrants and their baggage at forty cents per piece, regardless of size or weight, from the Garden up to Fifteenth street; Senator NORTON used to be interested with him in this business, which amounts to about $20,000 collected annually; the emigrants themselves; seven or eight thousand dollars a year profit is made thus. JOHN COOGAN, Chief Clerk of the Landing Bureau, said that there are a certain number of boarding-house-keepers allowed in the Garden, who have to give an account of the number of people they take away; if complaints are made against them, they are not allowed to enter the Garden again. Mr. BERNARD CASSIDY said he had nothing to do, directly or indirectly, with a boarding-house or restaurant; never received any emolument, directly or indirectly, other than his salary for his services rendered. The investigation then adjourned, the Chairman announcing that should the Committee deem it further examination necessary, they would notify the Commissioners.

"The Crown of Woman"—The Last Discourse of Dr. Chapin's Series.

The last of a series of discourses suggested by texts selected from the Book of Proverbs, was delivered last evening by Rev. Dr. CHAPIN at the Universalist Church, corner of Fifth-avenue and Forty-fifth-street. Its title was "The Crown of Woman," and the text selected was from Proverbs xxxi., verses 29 and 30:

"Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.

Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised."

These words, said the reverend speaker, related to her who fills the office of wife and mother, who although living at home does not limit her efforts and her usefulness to that sphere. She extends her hands to the poor and needy, and is always happy in the work of doing good. This is the portrait of true womanhood. No young woman should content herself with being a mere ornament. To pronounce her such is not only insulting; it is injurious as well. When she acts as a mere ornament the condition in which she places herself is a fatal one. The real ornament of the womanly character is constituted of all that makes up the charm of womanhood. Although beauty of form is evanescent, it is not an evil. Often it is the index of a true heart, and then it is truly an ornament. And after all God has made no beauty more lovely than the beauty of womanhood. Dr. CHAPIN said that the true imperishable ornament of womanhood is her gentle sympathy. So far as man is concerned, happy is he who in his man's bosom carries a mother's heart. True beauty has its seat in the soul. The reverend gentleman, in speaking of woman's rights and the condition of obligation and the condition of rights are inseparable. To exercise these, woman must have scope and opportunity. Her obligations compel her to demand her rights. She has a right to develope her nature to the utmost of its power. Whatever power denies this is tyrannical. Woman has the right of doing and being the best she can. The question of woman suffrage was above ridicule. Throwing ridicule at it was like firing pop-guns at a thunder-storm. It may be funny, but it is not forcible. Even if women were to vote, God would still hold society together. He he holds the heavens together. Woman should be free to do the work she can do. She has a claim to the highest education. In conclusion the preacher counseled young women to be strong, true and faithful, not mere queens of society, but first in acts of mercy and charity, and first in a readiness for all good work.

COLLEGE BOATING.

Prospects for Boat Races—Harvard Men in Training—The Gateway Drew Blank Last Year—Some from College—Where Shall the Boat Regattas Take Place?

From the Boston Post.

Although the ice has not yet broken from the rivers, the great event of the year in college boating affairs already casts its shadow before. The new departure inaugurated by Harvard last Summer, by which all colleges are allowed to participate in the regatta, has awakened unwonted enthusiasm among college men, and there is every indication that the college regatta of 1872 will surpass all those which have preceded it, both in the number of contesting crews and in the fidvere which attends such events. Nothing daunted by the humiliating defeat which the Harvard oarsmen suffered at the hands of their bucolic brethren from the Amherst Agricultural College last year, the boating men at Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Williams, Brown, Amherst and Bowdoin are all preparing to dispute the claim of the farmers to the champion flags and to assert the superiority of science over muscle. Nothing has as yet been done with regard to the selection of the time or place of the race, or the making of other arrangements for the aquatic festival, but the Vice-President of the Association, Mr. S. S. RICHARDS, of Harvard, will soon call a convention of representatives from the various Colleges, and the preliminaries will then be arranged. The general interest in boating matters which is everywhere displayed, however, gives no uncertain sound as to the character of the coming regatta. Even the conservative Yale singlets are perspiring. A letter from College has been made to give way to the new idea, and the clerical professors who not long since denounced this species of athletic sport, are contributing their influence and money to the cause.

There is a compliant prevalent among Harvard men that the enthusiasm in boating matters, which has done so much for Harvard oarsmen in the past, is on the decline in the college, and that unless something is done to revive it, Harvard will have only her ancient laurels to boast of. The students complain that such men as BLAKIE, the CROWNINSHIELDS, SIMMONS and others, who have been so prominent in their midst today, to contribute their energy and muscle to Harvard's prowess. The general interest which used to be felt in boating matters, however, does not display itself at Harvard today. It is said that when a prominent boating man of Harvard was asked a few years ago how he managed to find so much time to give to boating and at the same time keep up with his studies, he replied that his studies in college did interfere with his boating more than they ought to.

The University crew of this year will be made up almost entirely of new men, all the members of last year's crew, with the exceptions of LOW, HOWARD and TUCKERMAN, having left the last class. LOWING, who pulled No. 4 in last year's boat, is now Captain of the crew, and he is carefully superintending the training of his men at the gymnasium. At present there are but nine men working for places in the boat, among whom are R. H. DANA, H. J. MONAGHAN, W. GOODWIN, all rowing last year's Freshmen crew, and the crew which acquitted itself so finely at Ingleside. BLINE, formerly of Amherst College, and a member of the Amherst crew, which so distinguished itself at Worcester two years ago, is another prominent candidate for a seat in the boat. It is hoped that TUCKMAN of last year's University crew, and R. S. RUSSELL, of the Yale University crew, may be persuaded to row this year, but just at present these gentlemen prefer to enjoy their ease. Mr. BLAKIE, the Harvard boat-builder, will build one of his inimitable shells for the crew, and he has already sent to England for some Aylins oars, which are said to be far superior to those hitherto used by college crews. The make-up of the crew will not be finally settled upon until after the men have had an opportunity to practice in their boat, as the manner of feathering the oar and a certain delicate suppleness, displayed only in practice, are quite as important considerations in selecting a boating man as physical muscle and wind. The Freshmen are not less active in their preparations for making up their crew, the unusually large class affording them a wide field from which to select their men. Their method of training is the same as that pursued by the University men, modified in its severity, of course, as is the boat, to a lighter craft. There is a meeting last Tuesday evening called by W. HARTWELL Captain of their crew, and under him they will undergo a thorough and systematic course of training.

It will be remembered that Yale went off in a huff last year and refused to enter her crews at the race because she could not meet her rival single-handed. Some time ago, however, she changed her determination, however, and her boating men are now hard at work preparing to participate in the regatta this year. Brown University and Amherst are jubilant over their boating prospects, and the oarsmen at the latter College are far from being discouraged at the prospect of having to go three miles away to reach a river on which to practice their crew.

The Agricultural College crew has not yet emerged from Winter quarters, but it will doubtless ere long be heard from. The College papers are discussing the propriety of inviting the agricultural crew from the race this year because that institution cannot be included in the list of colleges, in the sense in which that term is generally understood. Cornell University, at Ithaca, N. Y., boasts that she will send a crew to the regatta this year which will be able to square alongside of any crew within the limits of New-England States on a minister, and there seems to be no reason why she cannot make good her boast.

There is every prospect of there being a lively discussion between the different colleges as to where the regatta shall be held this year. All are fully agreed that the course at Ingleside is a bad one, and that it must be given up. The course, though "straight as a way," is not artificial, and practically it is not much broader than the course on Lake Quinsigamond, on account of shallows and sand bars; furthermore, the down-stream course affords no opportunity for testing the relative merits of the crews. So far as preference have been expressed, Harvard and Brown favor the old course on Worcester; while Yale prefers that on the Thames River, near New-London, Conn. The latter course is said to be an excellent one—straight as an arrow for more than three miles, with a width at its narrowest season of a quarter of a mile, between six feet soundings. The locality is about 100 miles from Boston, 120 from New-York, fifty from New-Haven, and nearly from Amherst, and is approached by railroads and steamers from all sides.

THE "BLACK CROOK."

Trouble Among the Arctics—The Goat, the Dog, the Man-Ape and Other Animals Fight in a Cage.

The "Black Crook" was performed for the last time at Niblo's Garden, on Saturday. The goat "Alexis" broke his hind legs, and is a candidate for either the hospital or meat market. Yesterday morning the entire "Black Crook" menagerie of animals was caged and set out on Crosby-street sidewalk to be transported to Boston. One cage contained the twin brother of Alexis, a fox, a large hound, a coach dog, two monkeys and a gigantic man-ape. The goat is generally transported in a separate cage, but on this occasion formed one of the happy family. The three monkeys sat at one end of the cage, grasping the bars with their slimy hands and grimacing at the crowd. The goat stood proudly in the centre, supported on the left by the two dogs and fox. The coach dog, desiring to renew his intimacy with the monkeys, attempted a peep in front of the goat, but the latter, resenting the insult, planted the unlucky canine to the bottom of the cage. The cracking of ribs beneath his repeated buns, and howls of agony from the dog, were heard for a moment. Then, with a deep baying, the hound sprang and attempted to reach the jugular of the goat. But the brother of Alexis met him on the fly, and planted a blow between the eyes that piled him up in his corner. The hound came to time, but here the monkeys joined in the melée. The gigantic man-ape sprang upon the back of the goat, and winding his tail around his body, with long, sinewy arms, grasped his foe about the neck. The bitter at the dogs, which snapped at everything promiscuously. The monkeys, which were of great size and strength, also wound about the bodies of the different combatants, and formed such an indiscriminate mass, that it was almost impossible to tell which body belonged to one or the other. The bleared eyes and hairy faces of the apes were joined as by serpents folds to the clear-cut heads and soft lips of the dogs, while the horny and stubborn head of the goat looked out from the mass like a Gorgon's visage. The tremendous power of the man-ape here showed itself, for he nearly strangled the dogs, at the same time holding the goat tight beneath him. The monkeys pinched and bit at the man-ape, while he was engaged with his more powerful antagonist. The fox, with characteristic cunning, kept out of the way. The barking of the dogs, snarling and almost human cries of the apes, and the uproar in the adjoining cages, surpass description. By the most determined efforts on the part of the keepers, the combatants were finally separated, and placed, much injured, in different cages.

Shocking Accident on a Jersey City Ferry-Boat.

Early yesterday morning, the mangled remains of a man were discovered among the machinery of the Jersey City ferry-boat Newark. It seems that on Saturday night, when the boats were so greatly delayed in their trips by the storm, the cabins became cold from the heating steam being shut off, all steam being required to drive the boat. Many of the passengers went into the engine-room for warmth, though strictly this is against the rules of the Company; one of them on board the Newark appears to have gone too near the machinery, and was caught by it. When the body was found yesterday morning, not a whole bone in it was unbroken; one arm was torn off, and the face was not recognized and bruised. Two persons were placed in charge of the body, and they were waiting to afford a clue to the identity of the unfortunate man.
